Programs Offered

Post Graduate Programmes (PG)

- Master of Business Administration
- Master of Computer Applications
- Master of Commerce (Financial Management / Financial Technology)
- Master of Arts (Journalism and Mass Communication)
- Master of Arts (Economics)
- Master of Arts (Public Policy and Governance)
- Master of Social Work
- Master of Arts (English)
- Master of Science (Information Technology) (ODL)
- Master of Science (Environmental Science) (ODL)

Diploma Programmes

- Post Graduate Diploma (Management)
- Post Graduate Diploma (Logistics)
- Post Graduate Diploma (Machine Learning and Artificial Intelligence)
- Post Graduate Diploma (Data Science)

Undergraduate Programmes (UG)

- Bachelor of Business Administration
- Bachelor of Computer Applications
- Bachelor of Commerce
- Bachelor of Arts (Journalism and Mass Communication)
- Bachelor of Arts (General / Political Science / Economics / English / Sociology)
- Bachelor of Social Work
- Bachelor of Science (Information Technology) (ODL)

AMITY UNIVERSITY ONLINE
Amity Helpline: (Toll free) 18001023434
For Student Support: +91 - 8826334455
Support Email id: studentsupport@amityonline.com | https://amityonline.com

Product code
81030112000577

Business Communication

AMITY

Business Communication

AMITY UNIVERSITY ONLINE

(C) Amity University Online

Business Communication

(c) Amity University Online

AMITY UNIVERSITY ONLINE

© Amity University Press

All Rights Reserved

No parts of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise without the prior permission of the publisher.

SLM & Learning Resources Committee

Chairman : Prof. Abhinash Kumar

Members : Dr. Ranjit Varma
Dr. Maitree
Dr. Divya Bansal
Dr. Arun Som
Dr. Sunil Kumar
Dr. Reema Sharma
Dr. Winnie Sharma

Member Secretary : Ms. Rita Naskar

Published by Amity University Press for exclusive use of Amity Directorate of Distance and Online Education, Amity University, Noida-201313

(C) Amity University Online

Contents

Page No.

Module-I: Essential English Grammar 01

1.1 Introduction to English Grammar

1.1.1 Present Tense

1.1.2 Past Tense

1.1.3 Future Tense

1.1.4 Subject-verb Agreement: Part 1

1.1.5 Subject-verb Agreement: Part 2

1.1.6 Punctuation: Part 1

1.1.7 Punctuation: Part 2

1.1.8 Sentence Structure

1.1.9 Common Errors in English

1.1.10 Foreign Words: Part 1

1.1.11 Foreign Words: Part 2

Module - 2: Written English Communication 37

2.1 Writing Techniques

2.1.1 Essay Writing

2.1.2 Crafting Essays: Conventions, Structure and Techniques

2.1.3 Paraphrasing, Summarising and Precis Writing

2.1.4 Enhancing Expression: Synonyms, Nominalisation, and Voice Usage

Module - 3: Concept and Nature of Communication 57

3.1 Concept and Nature of Communication

3.1.1 What is Communication

3.1.2 Stages of Communication

3.1.3 Channels of Communication

3.1.4 Communication in Organisation Setting

3.1.5 Barriers to Effective Communication: Part 1

3.1.6 Barriers to Effective Communication: Part 2

3.1.7 Guidelines to Overcome Communication Barriers

3.2 Listening and Non-Verbal Communication

3.2.1 The Listening Process

3.2.2 Types of Listening

3.2.3 Barriers to Listening

3.2.4 Effective Listening Strategies

3.2.5 Non-verbal Communication: Part 1

(c) Amity University Online

3.2.6 Non-verbal Communication: Part 2

3.2.7 Non-verbal Communication: Part 3

Module - 4: Effective Presentation 88

4.1 Introduction to Effective Presentation

4.1.1 Pre-Presentation Jitters

4.1.2 Preparation and Practice

4.1.3 Delivering the Presentation

4.1.4 Qualities of a skilful Presenter

4.1.5 Capturing and Maintaining Attention

4.1.6 Handling Questions

4.1.7 PowerPoint Presentation

4.2 Writing for the Web

4.2.1 Netiquette

4.2.2 Professional Profiles

4.2.3 Blogs

4.3 Correspondence

4.3.1 Letters

4.3.3 Emails

4.3.4 Memo

Module - 5: Employment Communication 112

5.1 Reports

5.1.1 Functions and Types of Reports

5.1.2 Report and Proposal Process

5.1.3 Organising the Report and Proposal

5.1.4 Resume Writing

5.2 Employment Communication

5.2.1 Group Discussion

5.2.2 Qualities/Skills Assessed in Group Discussion

5.2.3 Do's and Don'ts in a Group Discussion

5.2.4 Effective Participation in Group Discussion

5.2.5 Mock GD Sessions

(c) Amity University Online

Module-I: Essential English Grammar

Notes

Learning Objectives:

At the end of this topic, you will be able to:

- Acquire skills required for office communication.
- Understand the significance of correctly forming sentences in order to be effective at work.

Introduction

Grammar is the foundation of any language, providing structure and rules that allow us to effectively communicate. It functions as a language's skeleton, giving it shape and coherence. Grammar is crucial in English for forming sentences, expressing ideas, and conveying meaning.

Whether you're learning English as a second language or if you're a native English speaker, understanding basic English grammar is essential for concise and clear communication. It teaches you how to effectively construct a sentence, choose the right tenses, communicate your meaning clearly, and prevent misunderstandings.

We will take a glance at fundamental concepts and rules that will help you establish a solid basis in this introduction to basic English grammar. Parts of speech, sentence structure, verb tenses, subject-verb agreement, and common grammatical errors will be covered.

1.1 Introduction to English Grammar

1.1.1 Present Tense

The present tense can be classified into four categories based on the state of the action:

1. Present Indefinite
2. Present Continuous
3. Present Perfect
4. Present Perfect Continuous

Now, let's examine the examples given:

1. I play - This is in the present indefinite or simple present.
2. I am playing - This is in the present continuous.
3. I have played - This is in the present perfect.
4. I have been playing for three hours - This is in the present perfect continuous.

The present indefinite indicates an action that is happening right now or occurs regularly. The English sentence structure for the present indefinite tense is used as follows.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Subject + V-I (s or es) + Object

Important points to remember:

1) When the subject is in the singular form and is in the third person, add "s" or "es" to the verb:

   For example:

   - I go - She goes
   - We search - He searches
   - I quiz - He quizzes
   - We play - He plays
   - I pray - He prays
   - I pay - He pays

For verbs ending in ss, o, z, x, ch, sh, add "es" to the verb. Otherwise, use "s" for the third person singular.

2) When the verb ends with "y," and the preceding word is a consonant, change "y" to "ies" in the simple present tense for subjects in the singular form, third person:

   For example:

   - They fly kites. - He flies kites.
   - Girls cry. - Suman cries.
   - I verify. - She verifies.

Negative and interrogative sentences follow the structures below (keeping the same words):

For negative sentences:

Subject + do/does + not + base form of the verb

For interrogative sentences:

Do/Does + subject + base form of the verb?

Negative = Subject + Do/Does not + V-I + Object

Interrogative = Do/Does+ Subject + V-I + Object?

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
I play chess.	I do not play chess.	Do I play chess?
He goes to office.	He does not go to office.	Does he go to office?
They write a lesson.	They do not write a lesson.	Do they write a lesson?
It rains.	It does not rain.	Does it rain?
We sing a song.	We do not sing a song.	Do we sing a song?

(c) Amity University Online

The present indefinite tense is used in different situations as follows:

1) Based on eternal truths:
   - The sun rises in the east.
   - Birds fly.
   - The Earth revolves around the sun.
2) Based on day-to-day activities:
   - I get up early in the morning.
   - My mother goes to the temple every day.
   - He plays football daily.
3) In direct narration, when the reporting verb is in the simple present tense, there is no change in the tenses of the reported speech:
   - Ram says that Shyam was playing cricket.
   - He says that it will rain tomorrow.
4) During commentary on radio and television, only the simple present tense is used. Raju passes the ball to Saluja, who, in turn, passes it to Sonu. Sonu heads the ball past the goalkeeper and scores!
5) Sentence starting with here and there with an exclamatory mark is also used in Simple present tense
   - There she lives!
   - There goes the ball!
   - Here comes the train!
6) The headlines in a newspaper are also used in simple present tense:
   - Thief escapes, Cricket match draws, peace talk fails.
7) For planned future action, present indefinite can be used
   - Our college opens in the month of July.
   - He reaches here tomorrow.
   - Mr. Sharma retires on 31st December.
8) Simple present tense is used with “whenever” and “when”
   - Whenever it rains, the roof leaks.
   - He stays here for a day whenever he comes.
   - When he comes here, he brings fruits.
9) Simple present is used in quotations
   - Our teacher says, “The Sun rises in the east.”
   - Shakespeare says, “Birds fly and fish swim.”

Present Continuous Tense

Present continuous is also known as present progressive or present perfect. Read the following sentences.

- I am teaching

© Amity University Online

Notes

- He is reading.
- We are going to market.
- Ram is playing.
- We are singing.
- The children are making noise.

When any action is in happening in a continuous form, sentence formed in that case is defined as Present. Continuous Tense. The below sentence structure is used to form present continuous tense.

Subject + is/am/are + V-I + ing + object

Normal rule: In the sentences of Present Continuous Tense, subject is used with helping verb, is/am/are + verb I form +ing (IV form/V-4) is used.

Negative and Interrogative Sentences

Negative and interrogative sentences in Present Continuous Tense are formed with below structure

Negative = Subject + is/are/am + not + V-IV + object

Interrogative = Is/are/am + Subject + V-IV + Object?

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
I am writing.	I am not writing.	Am I writing?
They are playing.	They are not playing.	Are they playing?
He is watching T. V.	He is not watching T. V.	Is he watching T.V?
I am reading.	I am not reading.	Am I reading?

The present continuous tense is used in various situations for actions that are continuous at the time of speaking:

1) Examples:
   - He is writing a letter.
   - He is playing basketball.
   - Mahesh is reading a magazine.
2) Present continuous tense is also used when actions are in regular process
   - He is writing a book nowadays
   - I am serving in this office
   - Meera is learning English nowadays
3) The actions planned which are going to be completed in near future. Can be used in Present Continuous tense
   - They are going to London tomorrow
   - We are meeting early in the evening

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- He is coming day after tomorrow

4) In the sentences like: "People are constantly complaining.", the use of words such as always, continually, constantly, forever are used in present continuous tense

- She is always cribbing.
- They are constantly bothering us.
- You are forever finding faults in us.

5) Stative and dynamic verbs: Some verbs are not used normally in continuous form; verbs like these are known as Stative verbs. Stative means fixed. It is also known as Non- Conclusive Verbs

Stative verbs are further classified in five parts.

- Verbs of Perception: See, hear, smell, taste, Feel etc.
- Verbs of appearance, such as "look," "resemble," "seem," and "appear," and verbs of emotions, including "want," "desire," "wish," "hate," "hope," "like," "refuse," and "believe," are utilised in different situations in the English language.
- Verbs of thinking: Think, agree, suppose, trust etc.
- Verbs of possessions: Belong, owe, own, contain, have etc.

Incorrect	Correct
We are seeing with our eyes.	We see with our eyes.
Are you hearing a strange noise.	Do you hear a strange noise?
We are smelling with our nose.	We smell with our nose.
The water is feeling cold.	The water feels cold.
I am having a car.	I have a car.
The book belonging to me.	The books belong to me.

Dynamic Verb: It means functional. Dynamic is opposite to Stative. For e.g. He is swimming, Ram is driving, she is walking etc.

Present Perfect tense

The action, which indicates completion in present, Present perfect tense, is used for the same.

Read the following sentences.

- He has gone.
- I have taken a bath.
- She has slept.
- Suresh has just arrived.
- It has just struck seven.

Present Perfect Tense is used in sentences in which the actions will take place in present. Below is the structure used for sentence creation in Present Perfect Tense.

© Amity University Online

Notes

Subject has/have + V-III + Object

'Has' is a helping verb which is used with Singular subect and third person. For e.g. He, she, it, name, my father, my sister. Whereas, 'Have' is used with I, You, we or any plural subject.

Negative and Interrogative Sentences

Below is structure used for negative and interrogative sentence in present perfect tense.

Negative = Subject + has/have+not + V-III + Object

Interrogative = Has/Have + Subject + V-III + Object?

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
I have taken dinner.	I have not taken dinner.	Have I taken dinner?
He has gone.	He has not gone.	Has he gone?
Meera has arrived.	Meera has not arrived.	Has Meera arrived?

Rules:

In negative sentences not is used after helping verb has/have. No other changes in rest of the sentence.

In interrogative sentences helping verb, have/has is used before the subject.

Use of Present Perfect Tense in various situations

1) When any actions have taken place in past and still is continuous in present, then Present Perfect Tense is used. For e.g.

- He has lived in the house for 10 years
- She has been ill since Saturday
- I have known him from 5 years

All the above sentences show, all the actions which took place in past is still continues in present.

2) Present Perfect tense is used in sentences where there is no definite time to complete the actions and if actions are completed or not yet for e.g.

- Have you read 'Hamlet'?
- He has gone to Russia.
- He has been to Russia

1) The sentence "I have never known him to accept a bribe" implies that the speaker has never observed him accepting a bribe.

2) The difference between "He has gone to Russia" and "He has been to Russia" is that the former suggests he is currently in Russia or on his way there, while the latter means that he visited Russia at some point in the past.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

3) The present perfect tense is used for actions completed in the present, as shown in the following examples:
   - It has just struck nine.
   - He has just gone out.
   - The cat has just had kittens.
4) The present perfect tense is used when actions that occurred in the past have an impact on the present, as demonstrated in the following examples:
   - The lift has broken down.
   - He has eaten all the fruits.
   - I have completed my work.
5) Time expressions like "yet," "always," "never," "already," "up to now," "today," "often," "several times," "lately," "recently," "so far," and "ever" are used in the present perfect tense, as seen in the following examples:
   - Have the children gone to school yet?
   - Has Ramesh left yet?
   - I have already seen the film.
   - Have you ever fallen off a horse?
   - I have never been late for work.
6) The structure "It is" is used with the present perfect tense in sentences like:
   - It is five years since I have seen her.
   - It is three months since I have smoked a cigarette.
7) To initiate a conversation about past actions, the present perfect tense should be used, as shown in the following examples:
   - Where have you been? I have been to the cinema.
   - What have you bought? I have bought one t-shirt only.

Present Perfect Continuous Tense:

The present perfect continuous tense is used for actions that are ongoing at the moment but not yet completed.

Read the following sentences

- He has been playing from two hours
- Shyam has been waiting for you since morning
- It has been raining for a long time
- Arti has been dancing for two hours

To create sentences in present perfect continuous tense, below structure is used

Subject + Has/have been + V-IV + Object + Since/for+…….

Points to remember

- For/Since: To indicate time in Present Perfect Continuous, for, since is used. For e.g. for two hours, for 20 days, for a long time etc.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- Has been is used with singular number, third person (He, She, It, Name, My mother, my father etc.)

Negative and Interrogative Sentences

Below structure is used to create negative and interrogative sentences in present perfect continuous tense.

Negative = Subject + has/have + not + been + V-IV + object + since/for +……

Interrogative = Has/Have + Subject + been+V-IV + Object + since/for +…….?

Read the following sentences

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
I have been writing for two hours.	I have not been writing for two hours.	Have I been writing for two hours?
He has been eating since morning.	He has not been eating since morning.	Has he been eating since morning?
It has been raining since morning.	It has not been since morning.	Has it been raining since morning?
They have been dancing since afternoon.	They have not been dancing since afternoon.	Have they been dancing since afternoon?

Use of Present Perfect Continuous tense in various situations

1) Any action which has taken place in past and still taking place continuously in present, in that case Present Perfect Continuous is used. For e.g.
   - He has been writing for two hours
   - He has been living with Ram for two months
     - He has been sleeping for two days

1.1.2 Past Tense

As per actions past tense is divided unto for parts:

- Past Indefinite
- Past Continuous
- Past Perfect
- Past Perfect Continuous

Past Indefinite Tense

All actions, which have taken place and completed in past, in that case Past Indefinite or Past Simple Tense is used.

Read the following sentences

- Sita wrote a letter to Ram
- I wrote a book

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- ❖ I helped her
- ❖ Raja donated two thousand rupees

Negative and Interrogative Sentences

Below structure is used to create negative and interrogative sentences in Simple Past Tense.

Negative = Subject + did not + V-I + Object

Interrogative = Did + Subject + V-I + Object?

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
He wrote.	He did not write.	Did he write?
She went.	She did not go.	Did she go?
They played.	They did not play.	Did they play?

Use of Past Indefinite Tense in Various Situations

- Any action, which has taken place in past, normally in sentences, the time of the actions are indicated and are definite. For e.g.
  - ❖ An accident took place yesterday.
  - ❖ He came last night.
  - ❖ I wrote a letter day before yesterday.
- Actions which are completed in past.
  - ❖ He went to the market.
  - ❖ Ramesh bought a pen.
- To express any habit of the past, Simple past is used.
  - ❖ He always carried the bag.
  - ❖ He never missed the train.
  - ❖ Ram is always on time.

  Please note to indicate habits of past 'used to' is used.
- Past Indefinite Tense is used in conditional sentences with an 'if'. For e.g.
  - ❖ If I had a map, I would give it to her.
  - ❖ If he tries to tease me, I would inform you.
- When two incidents take place together, in that case Past Indefinite Tense is used.

  For e.g.
  - ❖ When the queen entered the hall, orchestra played the National Anthem.
  - ❖ When C.M entered the meeting room, he received congratulations from everyone present.
- When expressing desires and regrets, the Simple Past Tense is used to depict an unreal past situation that influences the present circumstances. For example:
  - ❖ I wish I were a millionaire.

© Amity University Online

Notes

- I wish I knew him.
- If only she were allowed to deliver a lecture.

Past Continuous Tense:

The Past Continuous Tense is employed for actions that were ongoing in the past. The following sentences illustrate its use:

- Rocky was writing a letter.
- Sneha was sleeping.
- It was raining in my town.
- I was playing in the park.
- They were going to the park.

The structure for forming sentences in the Past Continuous Tense is as follows:

Subject + was/were + V-IV + Object

Negative and Interrogative sentences

Here is the structure for creating negative and interrogative sentences in the past continuous tense.

Negative = Subject + was/were + Not + V-1V + Object

Interrogative = Was/were + subject + V-IV + Object?

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
He was writing.	He was not writing.	Was he writing?
They were smoking.	They were not smoking.	Were they smoking?
Rita was cooking.	Rita was not cooking.	Was Rita cooking?
I was reading.	I was not reading.	Was I reading?

Use of Past Continuous Tense in Various Situations

Past Continuous Tense:

The Past Continuous Tense is used for actions that were continuous in the past. Here are some examples:

- He was playing cricket.
- She was swimming in the swimming pool.
- Rahim was repairing the car.

Past Continuous Tense to indicate a person's past continuous habits:

- He was always making fun of others.
- They were continually bullying us.
- She was always grumbling.

Past Continuous Tense for actions happening simultaneously or when one action interrupted another:

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- When he arrived, his wife was cooking food.
- The boy was hit by the car when he was crossing the road.
- Where were you standing when the explosion happened?

Past Continuous Tense for two actions happening at the same time:

- While she was washing clothes, I was cooking.
- While they were playing, I was watching television.

Past Perfect Tense:

The Past Perfect Tense is used when actions are completed in the past. It is used to show the sequence of two completed actions, where the first action happened before the second action. The following sentences illustrate its use:

- The train had departed before I reached the station.
- Sita came after you had gone.
- The patient died before the doctor came.

Structure for forming sentences in Past Perfect Tense:

Subject + had + V-III + (before/after) +…. (Past Indefinite) +…

Negative Sentences in Past Perfect Tense:

To form negative sentences in Past Perfect Tense, use the structure:

Subject + had not + past participle (third form of the verb)

For example:

- She had not finished her homework before the teacher arrived.
- They had not seen the movie before it was released.

Interrogative Sentences in Past Perfect Tense:

To form interrogative sentences in Past Perfect Tense, use the structure:

Had + subject + past participle (third form of the verb) + ...?

For example:

- Had he completed the project before the deadline?
- Had they left for the party when you called?

Please note that in both negative and interrogative sentences, “had” is used before the subject, followed by the past participle of the verb, to indicate the Past Perfect tense.

Negative = Subject + had + not + V-III + Object

Interrogative = Had + Subject + V-III + Object?

© Amity University Online

Notes

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
She had written a book.	She had not written a book.	Had she written a book?
Meera had gone to Agra.	Meera had not gone to Agra.	Had Meera gone to Agra?
She had advised Kanika.	She had not advised Kanika.	Had she advised Kanika?
She had warned you.	She had not warned you.	Had she warned you?

Use of Past Perfect Tense in Various Situations

Past perfect are used in similar situations as given below. Sentences like these are not divided into two parts, but while reading the sentence it becomes clear that the action has been completed before present. For e.g.

- He had already informed me.
- I had already warned him.
- I had never been to Agra before.

Past perfect is used for verbs like hope, expect, think, intent, want, suppose, all the hopes related with past. For e.g.

- We had hoped that you would cooperate with us (but you did not cooperate)
- Despite their desire to donate some money, none was present there, so they could not donate any money.

Past perfect can be used with "since," "for," or "always" to indicate an action that started in the past and is still relevant at the time of speaking. For example:

- Shyam had been a doctor for ten years.
- Shyam had been a soldier since he was twenty-one.

Past perfect tense is also employed in conditional sentences.

For example:

- If he had met me, I would have helped him.
- If he had informed me, I would have gone there positively.
- If she had come to me, I would have given her a gift

This is an important structure; you must understand this carefully.

If + Subject + had + V-III +…+would have + V-III +…

Past Perfect Continuous Tense

Past Perfect Continuous Tense is used for actions which at the time of speaking is already happening in past.

Read the following:

- Gita had been watching T.V for two hours.
- Jakob had been living in the cottage since 1997.
- Nisha had been waiting for me since 11 o clock in the morning.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

The below structure is used to form sentences.

Subject + Had been + V-IV +……. + Since/for +…...

With subject had been and IV form of verb is used.

With the subject "had been," the IV form of the verb is used, and the structure for negative and interrogative sentences in Past Perfect Continuous tense is as follows:

Negative Sentences in Past Perfect Continuous Tense:

Subject + had not been + present participle (IV form of the verb)

Interrogative Sentences in Past Perfect Continuous Tense:

Had + subject + been + present participle (IV form of the verb) + ...?

Negative = Subject + had + not + been + V-IV + Object?

Interrogative = Had + Subject + been + V-IV + Object?

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
He had been waiting for her since morning.	He had not been waiting for her since morning.	Had he been waiting for her since morning?
Meera has been laughing since morning.	Meera had not been laughing since morning.	Had Meera been laughing since morning?
She had been writing blog for two hours.	She had not been writing blog for two hours.	Had she been writing blogs for two hours?

Use of Past Perfect Continuous Tense in Various Situations:

Past Perfect Continuous tense is used for actions in the past that were continuous. For example:

- He had been working since night.
- We had been playing chess for three hours.

Repeated actions of Past Perfect can also be expressed as Past Perfect Continuous:

- He had tried so many times to contact her (Past Perfect).
- He had been trying to contact her (Past Perfect Continuous).
- He had tried many times to get the job there (Past Perfect).
- He had been trying to get the job there (Past Perfect Continuous).

Please note that an action in the Past Perfect tense can sometimes be expressed as a continuous action in the Past Perfect Continuous tense.

1.1.3 Future Tense

According to actions, future tense is further classified in four parts:

- Future Indefinite.
- Future Continuous.

© Amity University Online

Notes

- Future Perfect.
- Future Perfect Continuous.

Future Indefinite Tense

The actions which take place in future, for the same Future Indefinite is used.

Read the following sentences.

- He will go to London.
- They will play basketball.
- I shall study.
- Let her go.
- Let us go to mall.

Please remember, which is neither present, nor past that is future. In sentences, try to understand the use of may, can, must. These verbs indicate whatever actions has to take place will take place in future.

The below structure is used.

Subject + will/shall/can/may etc + V-I

Negative and Interrogative Sentences

Negative and Interrogative sentences in future indefinite tense can be written as per the below structure:

Negative = Subject + will/shall + not + V-I + Object

Interrogative = Will/shall + Subject + V-I + Object?

Examples of negative and interrogative sentences in the Future Indefinite Tense:

- Negative Sentences: To form a negative sentence, you add 'not' after the modal verb (will/shall). For example:
  - He will not go to London.
  - They will not play basketball.
  - I shall not study.
- Interrogative Sentences: To form a question, you invert the subject and the modal verb. For example:
  - Will he go to London?
  - Will they play basketball?
  - Shall I study?

Remember, 'shall' is traditionally used with 'I' and 'we' to indicate the future, but in modern English, 'will' is commonly used for all subjects.

Additionally, modal verbs like 'can', 'may', and 'must' are used to express ability, permission, and obligation, respectively, and they can also refer to future possibilities or necessities. Here's how you might use them:

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- Can for ability: I can swim.
- May for permission: You may leave the room.
- Must for obligation: We must finish the report.

In the future tense, these modals suggest that the ability, permission, or obligation is related to a future event. For example:

- I can swim tomorrow.
- You may leave the room if you finish your work.
- We must finish the report by next Monday.

The Future Indefinite Tense, often referred to as the Simple Future Tense, is used to describe actions that will happen at some point later than now. It is formed by using will plus the base form of the verb. Here are some uses with examples:

1. Predictions or General Statements about the Future:
   - ❖ "It will rain tomorrow."
   - ❖ "I think she will win the competition."
2. Spontaneous Decisions:
   - ❖ "I'm hungry. I will order a pizza."
3. Promises or Voluntary Actions:
   - ❖ "I will help you with your homework."
4. Offers:
   - ❖ "I will carry your bags for you."
5. Conditional Sentences:
   - ❖ "If it rains, we will cancel the picnic."
6. In Questions:
   - ❖ "Will you attend the meeting?"

Remember, the Future Indefinite Tense is not used for actions that are already planned or decided. For planned future actions, the Present Continuous Tense or the "going to" construction is often used. For example:

- "I am meeting John at 10 AM tomorrow." (Present Continuous for planned actions)
- "I am going to study medicine next year." (Intention or plan)

Future Continuous Tens

The future continuous tense is used to describe actions that will be in progress at a specific point in the future. It is formed using the auxiliary verbs "will be" followed by the present participle form of the main verb (verb-ing).

Here's the structure for affirmative, negative, and interrogative sentences in the future continuous tense:

- Affirmative: Subject + will be + verb-ing
  - ❖ Example: She will be waiting for you at the airport tomorrow.
- Negative: Subject + will not be + verb-ing

© Amity University Online

Notes

- ❖ Example: They will not be attending the meeting next week.
- Interrogative: Will + subject + be + verb-ing?
  - ❖ Example: Will you be using this room later?

And here are some more examples for each:

- Affirmative:
  - ❖ I will be studying all night for the exam.
  - ❖ The birds will be singing at dawn.
- Negative:
  - ❖ I will not be going to the party tonight.
  - ❖ He won't be playing soccer this Saturday.
- Interrogative:
  - ❖ Will they be joining us for dinner?
  - ❖ Will it be raining when we leave?

The future continuous tense is particularly useful for expressing events that will happen over time in the future and for asking about someone's plans or predicting future events. Remember, for negative contractions, "will not" often becomes "won't" in spoken and informal written English.

The future continuous tense is quite versatile and can be used in various contexts. Here are some of the common uses:

1. To describe an action that will be in progress at a specific time in the future:
   - ❖ At 8 PM tonight, I will be watching the football match.
2. To express an action that will happen in the normal course of events:
   - ❖ Don't call her at 9 AM; she will be driving to work.
3. To ask politely about someone's plans without assuming anything:
   - ❖ Will you be using this room later?
4. To make predictions about the future based on present evidence:
   - ❖ Look at those dark clouds! It will be raining soon.
5. To describe two actions happening simultaneously in the future:
   - ❖ While you will be preparing the report, I will be conducting the surveys.
6. To indicate a future event that is fixed or decided:
   - ❖ This time next week, I will be lying on the beach.
7. To describe an action that will happen over a period of time in the future:
   - ❖ She will be studying medicine for the next five years.
8. To express a polite inquiry or offer:
   - ❖ Will you be needing any assistance with your luggage?

The future continuous tense helps to convey a sense of ongoing action in the future, providing a dynamic way to talk about events and plans. It adds a layer of depth to conversations about the future, allowing speakers to discuss the duration and timing of future activities with greater precision.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Future Perfect Tense:

Future perfect tense is used to denote an actions that will be completed in a near future at a specific time.

Below Structure is used in for sentences in Future Perfect Tense:

Subject + Will + Have + V-III + Object

1) Future Perfect Tense is used for actions that will be completed in the future at a specific time:
   - ❖ I shall have graduated by next year.
   - ❖ By the end of this year, I shall have received INR 1 lakh.
2) Future Perfect Tense is also used for actions that we think we know beforehand:
   - ❖ You will have heard about Mother Teresa.
   - ❖ He will have read the newspaper by now.

Future Perfect Continuous Tense:

Future Perfect Continuous Tense is used for actions that will be continuous in the future:

- ❖ They will have been playing for two hours by 7 o'clock.
- ❖ She will have been working in this office for four years by next month.
- ❖ Rahul will have been teaching in this college for three years.

Subject will/shall + have been + Object + Since/For +…

Negative and Interrogative Sentences

Below is the structure used for negative and interrogative sentence to form under Future Perfect Continuous.

Negative = Subject shall/will + not + have been + V-IV +…

Interrogative = Shall/will + Subject + have been + V-IV…..?

Affirmative	Negative	Interrogative
I shall have been playing cricket.	I shall have not been playing cricket.	Shall I have been playing football?
They will have been working.	They will not have been working.	Will they have been working.

Will/shall is used with have been to create sentences in Future Perfect Continuous.

1.1.4 Subject-verb Agreement: Part 1

1) Concord or Agreement: Concord refers to the formal agreement in person, number, gender, or tenses between various parts of a sentence.

© Amity University Online

Notes

2) Order (position): Word order in a sentence, including the positions of prepositions, adverbs, conjunctions, etc.

"The verb must agree with its subject in number and person." - Nesfield

Examples of Subject-Verb Agreement:

- I am playing.
- He is playing.
- We are playing.
- They are playing.

Exceptions to the rule of Subject-Verb Agreement:

1) When an imaginary sentiment is presented in a sentence:
   - I wish I were the Prime Minister.
   - Were she an eagle, she would fly to me.
2) When verbs like bless, save, help, or live show emotions of desire, wish, or blessings, and singular subjects are used, the plural form of the verb is used:
   - Long live the king.
   - May God bless you with a good job.
3) When the modals "dare" and "need" are used in sentences, they remain the same regardless of the subject's singular or plural form:
   - He need not go there.
   - How dare she oppose your views.
4) When two different nouns are used for the same person or object, a singular verb is used:
   - The poet and painter has died.
   - John, the clerk, and counsellor was present in the meeting.
5) When two nouns present the same meaning and are used to increase each other's value, a singular verb is used:
   - The scheme and plan of my life differ from that of yours.
   - Her authority and command in language is indeed great.
6) When two nouns are used as a phrase and present the same idea, a singular verb is used:
   - Bread and butter make a good breakfast.
   - Slow and steady wins the race.
7) When two or more singular nouns are joined with "or," "either," "neither," or "nor," a singular verb is used:
   - No man or woman was present there.
   - Either Ramesh or Kamla was present at the party.
8) When two or more nouns are of different numbers (singular or plural), the verb should be plural:
   - Neither the Director nor the film stars were present at the function.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- Ramesh or his friends are abusing him.

9) When two or more subjects are joined with "either.... or," "neither...nor," or are of different persons, the verb used should be of the near person:

- You and Ramesh are responsible for the loss.
- He or I am to go there.

10) When a plural noun indicates a definite quantity, amount, or unit, a singular verb is used:

- The Parliament has passed the bill.
- The fleet has reached the port.

11) Some nouns look plural in form but are singular in meaning, and a singular verb is used with them:

- No news is good news.
- The first innings was spoiled due to heavy rain.

12) Singular verbs are used with singular nouns used with "each" and "every":

- Each boy and girl has to attend the function.
- Each minute and each second is precious.

13) When two subjects are used with "not only... but also," the verb used is closer to the subject:

- Not only the principal but also the teachers were playing the match.
- Not only the students but also the class teacher was involved in the discussion.

14) Plural verbs are used with collective nouns that denote the whole class, such as "the poor," "the rich," "the disabled," "the young," "the old," "the English," "the French," etc.:

- The poor were trustworthy.
- The rich are dealing with an important issue.

15) Hair is used in singular, and a singular verb is used. However, when hair-counting calculations are done, a plural verb is used.

- His hair is black.
- They need five hairs of the horse.

Rule 14: If "most of" is used after a countable noun, then both the noun and the verb used will be plural. However, if the noun is uncountable, a singular verb is used.

- About half of the students were present there.
- Half of the food was spoiled.
- Half of the land was cultivated, and half of it was uncultivated.

1.1.5 Subject-verb Agreement: Part 2

Rule 15: Some nouns like furniture, luggage, information, advice, work, knowledge, equipment, behaviour, scenery, traffic, fruit, electricity, music, progress,

© Amity University Online

Notes

etc. are uncountable nouns. They cannot be pluralised; meaning “furniture” cannot be “furniture,” and “information” cannot be “information.” An article (a/an) cannot be used with them; only a singular verb can be used.

- Work is worship.
- His behaviour was not proper.
- Knowledge is power.
- Rule 16: The correct phrase is “as follows” instead of “as follow.” In English, “as follows” is used.
- The main points are as follows (not as follow).
- The details are as follows (not as follow)

Rule 17: When “the following” and “the undersigned” are used for a singular subject, a singular verb is used. Otherwise, a plural verb will be used.

The following are the new prices of the items.

- The undersigned has taken the decision. - N.K. Kumar
- The following is the summary of the discussion held in the meeting.

Rule 18: In many sentences, the repetition of a singular noun is used after a preposition. In sentences like these, a singular verb is used.

- Man after man was coming there.
- He begs from door to door.

Rule 19: Some nouns are already made in two parts and are plural; with them, a plural verb is used. For example:

- My shoes are dirty.
- His pants are tight.
- New scissors were purchased by me.

Rule 20: If in a sentence, an infinitive, gerund, phrase, or a clause is used as a subject, then a singular verb is used.

- Swimming is a good exercise (gerund).
- How to start is a big question (infinitive).
- That she is rich is known to me (clause).

Rule 21: If “more than” is used with a noun, then a singular verb will be used.

- More than one worker was absent.
- More than one gangster was killed.

Rule 22: In some sentences, “more” is used as follows:

- More books than one has been purchased by her.
- More boys than one was present in the lecture.
- More employees than one is not traceable.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Rule 23: In some sentences, prepositions come after a noun, and then the noun comes again. In these cases, a singular verb is used.

- The quality of these goods is well known.
- The colour of this shirt is liked by all.
- The smell of these flowers is liked by all.
- Your views on the matter are supported by all.

Rule 24: If in a sentence, a number or "the number" is used, then please remember that a singular verb will be used. A plural verb is always used with "a number," which means many.

- The number of students opting for English in Administrative Services is generally small.
- A number of essential books are always available in the library.
- There were a number of people waiting for their turn.

Rule 25: With "none," usually, a singular verb is used. However, in Modern English, a plural verb is used with "none." There is a lot of thought difference among grammarians in this context.

- None but the brave deserves the reward (singular).
- None were injured (plural).

Rule 26: When in a sentence, "nothing but" is used, then a singular verb is always used, even if the noun coming after is singular or plural.

- Nothing but the hill is seen.
- Nothing but birds is seen.
- Nothing but students is there

Rule 27: If "no" is used before singular nouns, then a singular verb is used.

- No boy and no girl was present at the party.
- No man and no woman was dancing at that time.

Rule 28: When countable figures are used with "and," then a singular verb is used. A plural verb can also be used. Note that usually, a singular verb is used.

- Four and four is eight.
- Four and four are eight.

Rule 29: Everyone, everybody, nobody, somebody, no one, each one, someone are used with a singular verb.

- Everyone was happy to get the news.
- Each one was given a gift.
- Someone was there in the room.
- Somebody is going there.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Rule 30: After some verbs, "as" is always used. These verbs include regard, describe, represent, portray, depict, mention, define, etc.

- You ought to have him registered as your sister.
- You should have treated him as your younger brother.
- He portrayed himself as a typical businessman.

Rule 31: After some verbs, "as" is not used. These verbs include name, call, term, think, consider, nominate, appoint.

- Ram called him a fool, a rogue, and a crook.
- I consider it a badly managed organisation.

1.1.6 Punctuation: Part 1

Punctuation, derived from the Latin punctum meaning a point, involves the correct use of stops or points in writing. The main punctuation marks are as follows:

a) The full stop represents the greatest pause and is used to mark the end of a declarative or imperative sentence; for example: "Dear patient, gentle, noble Nell was dead." In abbreviations, the full stop can be used, but it is often omitted in modern style; for example: M.A. or MA, M.P or MP, U.N.O or UNO. Please note that in current English, "Mr." and "Mrs." occur without a full stop, as they are regarded as full spellings.

b) The comma represents the shortest pause and is used:

   1) To separate a series of words in the same construction; for example: "England, France, and Italy formed an alliance." Note that a comma is generally not placed before the word preceded by "and."

   2) To separate each pair of words connected by "and"; for example: "We should be devout and humble, cheerful and serene."

   3) After a nominative absolute; for example: "This done, she returned to the old man with a lovely smile on her face."

   4) To mark off a noun or phrase in apposition; for example: "Milton, the great English poet, was blind."

   5) To mark off words used in addressing people; for example: "How are you, Mohan?" But when the words are emphatic, we ought to use the exclamation mark, for example: "Monster! By thee my child's devoured!"

   6) To mark off two or more adverbs or adverbial phrases coming together; for example: "Then, at length, tardy justice was done to the memory of Oliver."

   7) Before and after a participial phrase, provided that the phrase might be expanded into a sentence and is not used in a merely qualifying sense; for example: "Caesar, having conquered his enemies, returned to Rome."

   8) To indicate the omission of a word, especially a verb; for example: "Rama received a Parker pen; Hari, a watch."

   9) To separate short co-ordinate clauses of a compound sentence, for example: "The rain descended, and the floods came." "I came, I saw, I conquered."

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

10) To mark off a direct quotation from the rest of the sentence; for example: "He said to his disciples, 'Watch and pray.'

11) Before certain co-coordinative conjunctions; for example: "To act thus is not wisdom, but folly."

12) To separate a noun clause- whether subject or object- preceding the verb; for example: "Whatever is, is right."

13) To separate an adverbial clause from its principal clause; for example: "When I was a bachelor, I lived by myself." When the adverbial clause follows the principal clause, the comma is frequently omitted; for example: "Seek to please if thou wouldn't be happy."

c) The semicolon represents a pause of greater importance than that shown by the comma. It is used:

1) To separate the clauses of a compound sentence when they contain a comma, for example: "He was a brave, large-hearted man; and we all honoured him."

2) To separate a series of loosely related clauses; for example: "Her court was pure; her life serene."

d) The colon marks a still more complete pause than that expressed by the semicolon. used (sometimes with a dash after it)

1) To introduce a quotation; for example: "Bacon says: 'Reading makes a full man, writing an exact man, speaking a ready man.'"

2) Before enumeration, examples, etc.; for example: "The limitation of armaments, the acceptance of arbitration as the natural solvent of international disputes, the relegation of wars of ambition and aggression to the categories of obsolete follies: these will be milestones, which mark the stages of the road."

3) Between sentences grammatically independent but connected in sense; for example: "Study to acquire a habit of thinking: no study is more important."

e) The question mark is used, instead of the full stop, after a direct question; for example: "Have you written your exercise?" But the question mark is not used after an indirect question.

f) The exclamation mark is used after interjections and after phrases and sentences expressing sudden emotions or a wish; for example: "Alas! Oh dear!" "What a terrible fire is this!"

Note: Punctuation is essential in conveying meaning and clarity in writing. The correct use of punctuation marks ensures that sentences are well-structured and understandable

1.1.7 Punctuation: Part 2

g) Inverted commas are utilized to enclose the exact words of a speaker or a quotation; for example:

"I would rather die," he exclaimed, "than join the oppressors of my country."

© Amity University Online

Notes

h) The dash is used:

1) To indicate an abrupt stop or change of thought; for example:

If my husband were alive—but why lament the past?

2) To resume a scattered subject; for example:

Friends, companions, relatives—all deserted him.

i) The hyphen—a shorter line than the dash—is used to connect the parts of compound words; for example:

Passer-by, man-of-war, jack-of-all-trades.

j) Parentheses or double dashes are used to separate from the main part of the sentence or clause, which does not grammatically belong to it.

k) The apostrophe is used:

1) To show the omission of a letter or letters.

2) In the genitive case of nouns.

3) To form the plural of letters and figures.

1.1.8 Sentence Structure

A sentence is a group of two or more words written in a specific order to convey meaning. For example, "She goes to the market" is a sentence with a clear meaning. If a group of words lacks meaning, it cannot be called a sentence.

Sentences can be categorised into four types based on their functions:

1) Declarative or Assertive Sentences: These sentences make statements or assertions. For example, "She sat on a wall."

2) Interrogative Sentences: These sentences ask questions. For example, "Where do you work?"

3) Imperative Sentences: These sentences express commands, requests, or entreaties. For example, "Have mercy upon us, be silent."

4) Exclamatory Sentences: These sentences express strong feelings. For example, "How cold the night is! What a shame!"

In terms of sentence structure, there are four types of sentences:

1) Simple Sentences: These contain a single, independent clause. For example:

- "I don't care for dogs."
- "Our school basketball team lost their last round of the season 75-68."
- "The old inn inverses the bus stop in the focal point of the town is most likely going to be wrecked toward the finish of one year from now."

2) Compound Sentences: These contain two independent clauses joined by a coordinating conjunction. For example:

- "I don't care for dogs, and my sister doesn't care for cats."
- "You can write on paper, or you can use a computer."

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- ❖ "A tree fell onto the school rooftop in a storm, but none of the students was harmed."

3) Complex Sentences: These contain an independent clause and one or more dependent clauses. For example:

- ❖ "I don't care for dogs that bark at me when I go past."
- ❖ "She got my homework done while her father prepared dinner."
- ❖ "You can write on paper, although a computer is better if you want to correct errors easily."

4) Compound-Complex Sentences: These contain at least three clauses, with two being independent and one dependent. For example:

- ❖ "I don't care for dogs, and my sister doesn't care for cats because they make her sneeze."
- ❖ "You can write on paper, but using a computer is better as you can easily correct your mistakes."
- ❖ "A tree fell onto the school rooftop in a storm, but none of the students was harmed, although many of them were in classrooms at the top of the building."

Avoiding run-on sentences and sentence fragments is essential for clear and effective writing. Varying sentence types can also make the writing more engaging and easier to read.

1.1.9 Common Errors in English

When someone uses language incorrectly, it is not always fair to make a judgment about their knowledge or training. Mistakes in words, spelling, and punctuation can happen to even the most educated individuals. Language is powerful and can have a lasting impact on others, so it's essential to strive for accuracy.

Here is a comprehensive list of common grammar mistakes:

1. "First come, First Serve": It should be "First come, First Served."
2. "I could mind less": The correct version is "I couldn't care less."
3. "I regardless": The correct word is "regardless."
4. "I" as the final say in a sentence: Incorrect. It should be "Karlee talked to Brandon and me."
5. "Me" as the first word in a sentence: Incorrect. It should be "Brandon and I met at Starbucks this morning."
6. "Shoe-in": The correct term is "shoo-in."
7. "Emigrated to": It should be "emigrated from" or "moved to."
8. Misuse of punctuation: Punctuations should not be used for plurals or decades.
9. "Prostrate disease": The correct term is "prostate."
10. "Skillful deception": The right phrase is "sleight of hand."
11. "Sharpened in": It should be "honed in" or "homemade."
12. "Bedeviled breath": The correct phrase is "bated breath."

© Amity University Online

Notes

13. “Bit of psyche”: It should be “peace of mind.”
14. “Wet your appetite”: The correct version is “whet your appetite.”
15. “Make due”: It should be “make do.”
16. “Do tirelessness”: The correct term is “due diligence.”
17. “Crested my advantage”: The right phrase is “aroused my curiosity.”
18. “Must of, should have, would of, and could of”: It should be “must have, should have, would have, and could have.”
19. “Per state or per say”: The correct term is “per se.”
20. “All the unexpected”: The correct phrase is “all of a sudden” or “suddenly.”
21. “The main year commemoration”: The correct version is “the first anniversary.”
22. “More regrettable comes to more terrible”: The correct phrase is “worse comes to worst.”
23. “Unthaw”: The correct term is “thaw.”
24. “Heated water tank”: It should be “hot water tank” or “water heater.”
25. “Boldface lie”: The correct phrase is “bald-faced lie.”
26. “Chock it up”: The correct phrase is “chalk it up.”
27. “Through some serious hardship”: The correct phrase is “through the wringer.”
28. Subject and pronoun difference: Be careful with pronoun choices in sentences.
29. “Given free rule”: The correct phrase is “given free rein.”
30. “Nip it in the butt”: The correct phrase is “nip it in the bud.”
31. “Tie me over”: The correct phrase is “tide me over.”
32. “Toe the line”: The correct phrase is “tow the line.”
33. “Chalk full”: The correct phrase is “chock-full.”
34. “Throws of energy”: The correct phrase is “throes of passion.”
35. “A quiet point”: The correct phrase is “a moot point.”
36. Misuse of “really”: Use “really” appropriately in sentences.
37. “Expresso”: The correct term is “espresso.”
38. “Jive with the facts”: The correct phrase is “jibe with the facts.”
39. “For-tay” for strong point: The correct pronunciation is “forte.”
40. “Eccetera”: The correct pronunciation is “et cetera.”
41. “Profound cultivated”: The correct term is “deep-seated.”
42. “Concentrate retribution”: The correct phrase is “exact revenge.”

1.1.10 Foreign Words: Part 1

Certainly! Let’s continue exploring interesting English loanwords from French and German, along with their pronunciations:

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

From French:

1. Déjà vu: The feeling of having experienced something before, pronounced as "day-zhah voo."
2. Fiancé/Fiancée: A man engaged to be married (fiancé) or a woman engaged to be married (fiancée), both pronounced as "fee-ahn-say."
3. Boutique: A small, stylish shop, pronounced as "boo-teek."
4. Cliché: An overused phrase or idea, pronounced as "klee-shay."
5. Rendezvous (verb): To meet at a specific time and place, pronounced as "ron-day-voo."
6. Baguette: A long, thin loaf of French bread, pronounced as "bah-get."

From German:

1. Doppelgänger: A look-alike or double of a person, pronounced as "daw-puhl-geng-er."
2. Zeitgeist: The spirit or mood of a particular period in history, pronounced as "tsayt-gyst."
3. Wanderlust: A strong desire to travel and explore the world, pronounced as "vahn-der-luhst."
4. Pretzel: A type of baked bread product, often twisted in a knot shape, pronounced as "pret-suhl."
5. Kaputt: Broken or non-functioning, pronounced as "kuh-put."

These loanwords continue to shape the English language and showcase the ongoing exchange of ideas and cultures between nations. Whether it's in the fields of arts, food, or everyday life, these borrowed words have seamlessly integrated into English, adding depth and diversity to its lexicon.

1.1.11 Foreign Words: Part 2

From Yiddish:

1. Glitch: Refers to a small problem that doesn't hinder completing a task.
2. Klutz: An individual who is clumsy or awkward, prone to accidents and breaking things.
3. Spiel: In Yiddish and German, it means "play," but in English, it's used for a quick, rehearsed speech or story often used to persuade others.
4. Schmooze: A verb meaning to chat with someone in a friendly manner, often with the intent to gain an advantage.

From Spanish:

1. Guerrilla: Originally meaning "little war" in Spanish, it can be used in both languages to describe an informal group fighting against the government.
2. Macho: Describes a very strong or masculine person, and can also refer to someone who is overly self-confident about their masculinity.
3. Patio: In English, it typically refers to an outdoor area outside a house, often with a table and chairs but no roof.

© Amity University Online

Notes

4. Plaza: Refers to an open area in a city, often known as a "square." It's also used in the names of shopping centers, corporate complexes, or other large public spaces.
5. Piñata: A toy filled with treats that children break open at parties to retrieve the goodies.
6. Siesta: Another term for a nap or short sleep, usually taken in the afternoon, particularly in hot countries.

From Japanese:

1. Karaoke: A popular activity where people sing along to songs with lyrics displayed on a screen.
2. Karate: A well-known martial art that originated in Japan, meaning "empty hand" in Japanese.
3. Ninja: Originally meaning "spy" in Japanese, it's now commonly used in English to describe a person who can move and attack stealthily and skillfully.
4. Origami: The art of folding small pieces of paper to create intricate shapes and figures.
5. Tsunami: A massive sea wave, often caused by an earthquake.

From Native American Languages:

1. Chocolate: Derived from the Nahuatl language of Mexico, originally known as "xocoatl."
2. Shoe: A term with varied meanings depending on the context, but generally refers to a casual shoe.

From Chinese:

1. Dimsum: Originally from Cantonese Chinese, it describes a style of meal with various small dishes.
2. Gung-ho: In Chinese, it means "cooperate," but in English, it's used informally to express excitement or enthusiasm.
3. Kung Fu: A popular martial art, also known as "karate" in many languages.
4. Tofu: Originally "dou fu" in Chinese, it refers to a soy-based food product.
5. Typhoon: A large oceanic storm, which may have been influenced by the Chinese word "taifeng."

English has indeed borrowed words from numerous languages, making it a fascinating and diverse linguistic tapestry. These loanwords have integrated seamlessly into the language and become an essential part of everyday communication.

Summary

- The content covers various aspects of grammar, with a particular focus on verb tenses, subject-verb agreement, and punctuation.
- It elaborates on the different forms of present, past, and future tenses, which include indefinite, continuous, perfect, and perfect continuous forms.
- The rules for subject-verb agreement are provided, emphasising the usage of singular verbs with uncountable nouns and plural verbs with specific plural nouns.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

- Punctuation marks, such as the full stop, comma, semicolon, colon, question mark, exclamation mark, inverted commas, dash, hyphen, parentheses, and apostrophe, are discussed.
- The conclusion highlights the four types of sentences: declarative, interrogative, imperative, and exclamatory. Additionally, it explains the structure of simple, compound, complex, and compound-complex sentences.

Glossary

- Present Indefinite: This tense is used to express actions that are happening in the present or are general truths.
- Present Continuous: This tense is used to express actions that are happening at the current moment.
- Present Perfect: This tense is used to express actions that have occurred in the past but have a connection to the present.
- Present Perfect Continuous: This tense is used to express actions that started in the past, are still happening, and have a connection to the present.
- Past Indefinite: This tense is used to express actions that happened in the past.
- Past Continuous: This tense is used to express actions that were happening in the past for a specific duration of time.
- Past Perfect: This tense is used to express actions that happened before another action in the past.
- Past Perfect Continuous: This tense is used to express actions that started in the past, were happening for a specific duration of time, and ended in the past.
- When referring to a singular subject, use a singular verb. When referring to a plural subject, use a plural verb.
- In sentences with a repetition of a singular noun after a preposition, use a singular verb.
- Some nouns are already plural and should be used with a plural verb.
- If a sentence has an infinitive, gerund, phrase, or clause as the subject, use a singular verb.

Check Your Understanding

1. Choose the correct tense for the following sentence: “She _____ to the concert last night.”

   a) go b) went c) goes d) gone

2. Identify the correct tense for the following sentence: “By next year, I _____ my studies.”

   a) complete b) completed c) completing d) will complete

3. Fill in the blank with the correct option: “The metro is now full of passengers, it ____ soon.”

   a) leave b) will leave c) is leaving d) left

© Amity University Online

Notes

4. Fill in the blank with the correct option: “Please, do not laugh _____ those beggars.”

   a) for b) against c) at d) from

5. Smita has been sending the letters ____ May 2016.

   a) from b) since c) for d) by

6. Before sometime, the monkey jumped ____ the river.

   a) on b) over c) into d) above

7. Board ____ not ____ these questions in the previous year.

   a) was, ask b) did, ask c) is, ask d) will, ask

8. Neither of the answers ___ correct.

   a) were b) have c) has d) was

9. Each of the players ___ given a participation certificate.

   a) were b) was c) are d) have been

10. Following strict guidelines ___ the safety of all passengers.

    a) ensures b) insures c) accepts d) excepts

11. She always ___ about the consequences before making a decision.

    a) think b) thought c) thinks d) thinking

12. Identify the sentence with the right comma placement.

    a) Last month I drove to London, Bristol, Leeds and Cardiff.

    b) Last month I drove to London, Bristol Leeds and Cardiff.

    c) Last month I drove to London Bristol Leeds, and Cardiff.

    d) Last month I drove to London Bristol, Leeds, and Cardiff.

13. Which sentence has the correct comma usage?

    a) My friend who retires this year wants to live in Spain, or France.

    b) My friend, who retires this year, wants to live in Spain or France.

    c) My friend who retires this year wants to live, in Spain, or France.

    d) My friend, who retires this year, wants to live, in Spain or France.

14. Choose the sentence with the correct comma placement.

    a) Please get me, some cotton candy milk and some butter.

    b) Please get me some cotton candy, milk and some butter.

    c) Please get me some cotton candy, milk and, some butter.

    d) Please get me some cotton candy milk and, some butter.

15. Which of the following is not a punctuation mark?

    a) Full stop b) Comma c) Colon d) Hashtag

16. Complete the sentence with the appropriate verb: Snehi _____ at the grass in the garden.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

a) is watching b) is seeing c) is washing d) is looking

17. Choose the correct word to fill in the blank: She hasn't bought _____ mangoes.

a) some b) any c) much d) a lot

18. Fill in the blank with the appropriate words: There are _____ in the examination room but only one instructor?

a) a lot of students b) many people c) a lot people d) much students

19. Select the correct statement.

a) Do not make friend with selfish people.

b) Do not make friendship with selfish people.

c) Do not make friends with selfish people.

d) Do not make friendly with selfish people.

20. Choose the correct statement.

a) She does not know the reason for his disappearance.

b) She does not know the reason of his disappearance.

c) She does not know the reason at his disappearance.

d) She does not know the reason with his disappearance.

Exercise

A) Correct the following sentences

1. The students will have left the school before the Headmistress came.
2. The train will have arrived before I reaches the station
3. He would have reached here before the sunset.
4. Will the girls have played the game at 7 P.M?
5. He will have finish the work by 8 P.M.

Answers:

1. The students will have left the school before the Headmistress comes.
2. The train will have arrived before I reach the station.
3. He would have reached here before the sunset.
4. Will the girls have played the game at 7 P.M?
5. He will have finished the work by 8 P.M.

B) Fill in the blanks with the future continuous/perfect/perfect continuous form of the verbs given in the brackets:

1. ……she……..(go) homer after holi?
2. The students……. (work). On their project next year
3. Her brother…… (study) in this college next year positively.
4. By next month, you…… (visit) all the famous lakes of Udaipur

© Amity University Online

Notes

5. I……. (live) here for twenty years by November 2003

Answers:

1. Will she go home after Holi?
2. The students will be working on their project next year.
3. Her brother will be studying in this college next year positively.
4. By next month, you will have visited all the famous lakes of Udaipur.
5. I will have been living here for twenty years by November 2003.

C) Correct the following sentences:

1. She is often coming to me on Sundays.
2. She just completed the letter then.
3. It came to my notice lately.
4. My brother has returned from training two months back.
5. My brother has left for America in 1980.
6. I know him from the last twenty years
7. I never met him this morning.
8. She did not write the letter till now.
9. He is always hearing classical music.
10. Last week I had met him twice.

Answers:

1. She often comes to me on Sundays.
2. She just completed the letter.
3. It came to my notice lately.
4. My brother returned from training two months ago.
5. My brother left for America in 1980.
6. I have known him for the last twenty years.
7. I never met him this morning.
8. She has not written the letter till now.
9. He always listens to classical music.
10. Last week I met him twice.

D) Point out the verbs in the following sentences and name their Moods and Tenses:

1. The river flows under the bridge.
2. I shall answer the letter tonight.
3. I knew he was there, for I had seen him come.
4. It has been raining all night

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

5. It is time we left.
6. He is waiting for you in the compound
7. Piper, pipe that song again.
8. I am hoping to get a holiday soon.
9. Perhaps it was better to obey him.
10. Do noble deeds, not dream them all day.

Answers:

1. The river flows under the bridge. (Indicative mood, present tense)
2. I shall answer the letter tonight. (Indicative mood, future tense)
3. I knew he was there, for I had seen him come. (Indicative mood, past tense)
4. It has been raining all night. (Indicative mood, present perfect tense)
5. It is time we left. (Subjunctive mood, present tense)
6. He is waiting for you in the compound. (Indicative mood, present continuous tense)
7. Piper, pipe that song again. (Imperative mood)
8. I am hoping to get a holiday soon. (Indicative mood, present continuous tense)
9. Perhaps it was better to obey him. (Indicative mood, past tense)
10. Do noble deeds, not dream them all day. (Imperative mood)

Subject-Verb Agreement:

1. Read the following sentences to find whether there is any error in any part
   1) "Under no circumstances (a)- I can help you (b)- in this venture" (c)- said Sita (d)
   2) "I don't like (a)- such a bright colour (b)-nor she does (c)"- he said to Ram (d)
   3) Never before (a)- I had been asked (b)- to go there (c)- by bus (d)
2. Fill in the blanks with suitable forms of verbs given in the brackets:
   1) Ramesh (pass) the post office on his way to office everyday
   2) He (tell) me that she had never met you.
   3) You (receive) your award tomorrow
   4) She (attend) college since May last
   5) If you promise to work hard I (allow) you to go on leave
3. Fill in the blanks with suitable forms of verbs given in the brackets
   1) A farmer was very fond of the two animals. When he (come) out for a stroll, these two creatures (amuse) him. One day as the farmer (walk) in the garden, these pets (run) away from him. He (search) for them but of no avail
   2) He (be) a black man. One winter morning he (look) out of his window as he (dress). He (not hate) the winter now, for he (know) that it (be) merely the spring asleep and that the flowers (rest).

© Amity University Online

Notes

Answers:

1. Read the following sentences to find whether there is any error in any part:
   1) "Under no circumstances can I help you in this venture," said Sita.
   2) "I don't like such a bright color, nor does she," he said to Ram.
   3) Never before had I been asked to go there by bus.
2. Fill in the blanks with suitable forms of verbs given in the brackets:
   1) Ramesh passes the post office on his way to the office every day.
   2) He told me that she had never met you.
   3) You will receive your award tomorrow.
   4) She has been attending college since May last.
   5) If you promise to work hard, I will allow you to go on leave.
3. Fill in the blanks with suitable forms of verbs given in the brackets:
   1) A farmer was very fond of the two animals. When he came out for a stroll, these two creatures amused him. One day as the farmer was walking in the garden, these pets ran away from him. He searched for them but to no avail.
   2) He was a black man. One winter morning he looked out of his window as he dressed. He did not hate the winter now, for he knew that it was merely the spring asleep and that the flowers were resting.
4. Rewrite the following with the correct forms of the verbs given within the brackets:
   1) I (sleep) soundly and (dream) that a dog (enter) the room. I (spring) off the bed.
   2) The shot (wound) the elephant. It (rush) back into the forest.
   3) We (plan) to go to a hill station. Last year we (go) to Shimla. We (decide) to go somewhere else this time.

   Answers:

   1) I was sleeping soundly and dreamt that a dog entered the room. I sprang off the bed.
   2) The shot wounded the elephant. It rushed back into the forest.
   3) We planned to go to a hill station. Last year we went to Shimla. We have decided to go somewhere else this time.
5. Correct the following sentences:
   1) The women who is standing there are my sisters
   2) It is one of the problems that was taken care of by the civil administration
   3) Nothing but monkeys are seen
   4) Much of the time were wasted by the students
   5) More than one man were killed there.

   Answers:

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

1) The woman who is standing there is my sister.
2) It is one of the problems that were taken care of by the civil administration.
3) Nothing but monkeys is seen.
4) Much of the time was wasted by the students.
5) More than one man was killed there.

6. In each of the following sentences supply a verb in agreement with its subject:
   1) To take pay and then not to do work_____ dishonest.
   2) The cost of all these articles_____risen.
   3) The Jury _____divided their opinions.
   4) No news_____good news.
   5) The Three Musketeers_____written by Dumas.

   Answers:
   1) To take pay and then not do work is dishonest.
   2) The cost of all these articles has risen.
   3) The Jury is divided in their opinions.
   4) No news is good news.
   5) The Three Musketeers were written by Dumas.

Punctuate the following:

1. Nothing is so easy and inviting as the retort of abuse and sarcasm but it is a paltry and an unprofitable contest
2. Think how mysterious and often unaccountable it is that lottery of life which gives to this man the purple and fine line and sends to the other rags of garments and dogs for comforter
3. The human mind is never stationary it advances or it retrogrades
4. The laws of most countries today are split into two kinds criminal law and civil law
5. Islam is one of the world's largest religions with an estimated 1100 1300 million believers it was founded in the 7th century by the Prophet Mohammad
6. There is slavery that no legislation can abolish the slavery of caste
7. Truly a popular error has as many lives as a cat it comes walking long after you have imagined it effectually strangled

Answers:

1. Nothing is so easy and inviting as the retort of abuse and sarcasm, but it is a paltry and unprofitable contest.
2. Think how mysterious and often unaccountable it is that the lottery of life which gives to this man the purple and fine linen and sends to the other rags and garments and dogs for comforter.

© Amity University Online

Notes

3. The human mind is never stationary; it advances, or it retrogrades.
4. The laws of most countries today are split into two kinds: criminal law and civil law.
5. Islam is one of the world's largest religions, with an estimated 1,100-1,300 million believers. It was founded in the 7th century by the Prophet Mohammad.
6. There is slavery that no legislation can abolish – the slavery of caste.
7. Truly a popular error has as many lives as a cat; it comes walking long after you have imagined it effectually strangled.

Learning Activities

1. What are the different parts of the present tense? Provide examples for each.
2. How is the past tense divided according to different actions? Give examples of sentences using each type of past tense.
3. Explain the classification of future tense based on actions. Provide examples for each type of future tense.
4. What are uncountable nouns? Give examples of uncountable nouns and explain their grammatical characteristics.

Check Your Understanding- Answers

Here's the answer key:

1. b) went
2. d) will complete
3. b) will leave
4. c) at
5. b) since
6. c) into
7. b) did, ask
8. d) was
9. b) was
10. a) ensures
11. c) thinks
12. a) Last month I drove to London, Bristol, Leeds and Cardiff.
13. b) My friend, who retires this year, wants to live in Spain or France.
14. b) Please get me some cotton candy, milk and some butter.
15. d) Hashtag
16. a) is watching
17. b) any
18. d) many students
19. c) Do not make friends with selfish people.
20. a) She does not know the reason for his disappearance.

Further Reading and Bibliography

1. Basic English Grammar for English Language Learners Book 2 by Howard Sargeant. Saddleback Educational, 2007.
2. Business Communication: https://www.icsi.edu/media/webmodules/CSEET/Business_communication.pdf

(c) Amity University Online

Module - 2: Written English Communication

Notes

Learning Objectives:

At the end of this topic, you will be able to:

- Recognize the importance of written English in personal and professional interaction.
- Learn the fundamental skills to convey your message in written.

Introduction

In today's interconnected world, effective written communication plays a vital role in both personal and professional interactions. Written English communication serves as a bridge, allowing individuals from different backgrounds and cultures to connect and understand one another.

As technology continues to advance, written communication has become even more prevalent. The advent of instant messaging, social networking platforms, and remote work environments has made the written word a primary means of exchanging ideas, sharing information, and collaborating on projects. Consequently, honing your written communication skills can significantly enhance your chances of success in various aspects of life.

Effective written communication goes beyond merely conveying information. It encompasses the art of crafting well-structured sentences, organising thoughts logically, and tailoring the message to suit the intended audience. The power to engage, persuade, and inspire others through the written word is a skill that can open doors and create opportunities in today's fast-paced, digitally-driven society.

Whether you are a student, a professional, or an individual seeking to improve your overall communication abilities, investing time and effort in developing your written English communication skills is immensely beneficial. You will learn essential tips, strategies, and best practices that will help you to express yourself with clarity, coherence, and impact

2.1 Writing Techniques

2.1.1 Essay Writing

The term "Essay" is defined in "The Concise Oxford Dictionary" as a "literary composition (usually prose and short) on any subject." It serves as a written expression of one's personal ideas or opinions on a particular topic, encompassing compositions that express personal views, provide information on a given subject, or present narratives or descriptions.

The term "Essay" is loosely applied to various compositions, ranging from Bacon's concise "Essays" to Macaulay's lengthy articles, almost as big as small books.

For our purposes here, an essay is an exercise in composition, and it's important to recall that the word "essay" means "an attempt" (Compare the verb "to essay," with the accent on the second syllable, meaning to attempt or try). The essays written at school are trial exercises or attempts to express thoughts in good English, sometimes referred to as "themes" since they are compositions written on given themes or subjects.

© Amity University Online

Notes

Characteristics of a Good Essay:

1) Unity: An essay must possess unity, developing one theme with a definite purpose. The subject should be clearly defined and consistently maintained throughout, excluding anything irrelevant.

2) Order: An essay should follow a certain ordered line of thought and arrive at a definite conclusion. It should not consist of haphazard reflections but maintain both unity of subject and unity of treatment.

3) Brevity: School essays should be concise and not overly long. Ideally, they should be around three hundred words, but the length may vary depending on the nature of the subject. Nevertheless, the essay should be expressed concisely.

4) Style: While friendly letters may have a conversational, easy, and natural style, an essay requires a more dignified and literary tone. Slang, colloquial terms, and free and easy constructions are not suitable for an essay. At the same time, attempting overly elaborate writing should be avoided. The secret to clear writing lies in clear thinking.

5) The Personal Touch: An essay should reveal the writer's personal feelings and opinions, reflecting their individuality. As already mentioned, an essay is a written composition that expresses one's personal ideas or opinions on a subject, and preserving this personal touch is vital to avoid a colourless and unremarkable essay.

To summarise: A good essay must possess unity, concisely discuss one subject in an orderly manner, and showcase a simple, direct, and clear style while retaining the writer's individuality. Three essential features of a successful essay include suitable subject matter, proper arrangement, and adequate power of expression. When these three elements converge, the essay becomes a success.

Classification of Essays:

Essays may be categorised as Narrative essays, Descriptive essays, Expository essays, Reflective essays, and Imaginative essays. However, it is crucial to remember that these classifications are not mutually exclusive, and some essays may embody characteristics of more than one class. For instance, a narrative essay may also contain descriptive elements, and essays of all classes may involve some level of reflection.

Now, let's begin with a breakdown of each type:

1) Reflective Essays: Reflective essays consist of thoughts on abstract topics, such as habits, qualities, social and political issues, philosophical subjects, and religious topics. In such essays, writers should explain the importance or advantages of possessing certain qualities, discuss the significance of social institutions, and expound on philosophical and theological theories, supporting their statements with sound reasoning and evidence.

2) Narrative Essays: A narrative essay primarily revolves around narrating events,

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

historical stories, biographies, incidents, accidents, journeys, and stories. However, it is important to remember that a narrative essay should not be mistaken for a short story or historical account. The essay should also offer reflections and comments on the events narrated.

3) Descriptive Essays: Descriptive essays involve the description of places or things, encompassing animals, plants, minerals, towns, countries, buildings, aspects of natural phenomena, and manufactured articles.

4) Expository Essays: Expository essays consist of explanations of subjects, institutions, industries, occupations, scientific topics, and literary topics.

5) Imaginative Essays: Imaginative essays explore subjects where the writer places themselves in imaginative scenarios they have not experienced in reality. These essays require creative thinking and expression.

Hints on Essay Writing:

1) General Preparation: One of the primary challenges in essay writing is the lack of material. This can be remedied by developing a love for reading, especially books on history, travel, biography, and science. Additionally, training the power of observation and engaging in conversations can also aid in acquiring knowledge.

2) Special Preparations: When writing on a specific subject, clearly define it in your mind. Collect materials through reading and observation, and jot down relevant points. Classify and arrange these points logically to create a full outline that will serve as a guide for writing the essay. Remember to divide the essay into paragraphs and maintain an introduction, body, and conclusion.

Example:

Let's take the example of writing an essay about "The Elephant" to illustrate the method of collecting materials and drawing up an outline. Begin by jotting down all the thoughts and ideas about elephants in a random manner and then classify them under suitable headings. Arrange them logically to form a full outline that will be the basis for writing the essay. In conclusion, essay writing involves a clear definition of the subject, proper preparation through reading and observation, thoughtful arrangement of ideas, and logical construction of the essay. By adhering to these principles, one can produce a successful essay.

2.1.2 Crafting Essays: Conventions, Structures, and Techniques

An essay's essence lies in adhering to formal and analytical norms. Understanding Conventions extend beyond mere subjective viewpoints, demanding solid backing with credible evidence. A poised, formal tone carries significance, forgoing any trace of informality. Clarity is achieved through an organised, coherent structure.

The Structure of Essay Writing:

Introduction

Embark with a commanding introduction that transitions from broad context to your specific subject. Ground your discourse with accepted background knowledge,

© Amity University Online

Notes

outlining the scope and defining key terms. Essential to your essay's core is the thesis statement, encapsulating your argument's essence.

Engaging the Main Body

Proceed to engage the main body paragraphs. Each paragraph tackles a pivotal concept, tightly bound to your thesis. Commence with a succinct topic sentence, offering a sneak peek into the paragraph's essence. Bolster your claims with compelling evidence, concrete details, and illustrative examples. Maintaining coherence, revisit the purpose verb introduced in your thesis.

Crafting Concluding Remarks

Mirroring introductions, concluding paragraphs offer closure. Restate your thesis with conviction, Summarising your argument's impact. Recapitulate main points without introducing novel information. Ponder prospective solutions or directions, providing a satisfying wrap-up.

Applying Insights for Effective Essays

To sum up, crafting essays demands adherence to formal, evidence-based norms. Comprising introductions, main body paragraphs, and conclusions, essays thrive on a well- crafted thesis. Incorporation of these insights create compelling and structured essays.

2.1.3 Paraphrasing, Summarising and Precis Writing

The term "paraphrase," derived from Greek, means "equivalent sentence." It refers to restating a passage's sense using different words. Paraphrasing involves reproducing another person's words in one's natural style or idiom while capturing the full meaning of the original text.

Paraphrasing Serves two Important Purposes:

a) It is an excellent exercise in composition. It tests a student's ability to understand and concentrate on what they read, promoting intelligent reading. Additionally, it trains students to express themselves clearly and simply, enhancing their grammatical and idiomatic composition skills.

b) Paraphrasing is a valuable method of explanation. It can clarify complex or obscure passages, making it useful for annotators of poems. For instance, a note in Palgrave's "Golden Treasury" explains a verse from Browning's "Rabbi Ben Ezra."

Characteristics of a good paraphrase:

1) Translation: Paraphrasing is akin to translation within the same language. It must faithfully reproduce and interpret the original passage's thoughts. For example, concise sentences may need expansion, while verbose ones may require compression.

2) Fullness: Unlike Summarising, paraphrasing reproduces both the general meaning and specific details of the original passage. Every element of the original must find representation in the paraphrase.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

3) Wholeness: Paraphrasing should treat the passage, not just line-by-line. It requires grasping the central idea behind the words to create a coherent paraphrase.

4) A complete piece of prose: A good paraphrase reads as a self-contained, clear, and intelligible composition in idiomatic English. Explanatory notes are unnecessary and indicate a failure to paraphrase effectively.

Paraphrasing poetry poses additional challenges due to the difference between verse and prose language. Poets may use archaic or uncommon words and employ word order inversion. The difficulty lies in capturing the poem's meaning while losing its poetic charm, as the rhythm and musicality of verse cannot be fully translated into prose.

In paraphrasing poetry, one must substitute archaic words with modern equivalents and consider the original word order while conveying the poem's essence without replicating its poetic elements.

For instance:

""Beside a hill, let my dwelling be, a humble cot;"

Instead of, "May a cot be mine beside a hill."

"The shepherd hears a sound of barking;"

Instead of, "The barking sound is heard by the shepherd."

"Celia, not that I am fairer or better than others;"

Instead of, "Not that I am juster or better than the rest."

On Linden, when the sun was setting low,

The untrodden snow lay bloodless and pale,

And the Iser flowed rapidly, dark as winter.

c) Flowery and ornamental language, frequently found in verse, should be simplified in prose. For example:

"Now the golden morning, high above,

Waves her dew-spangled wing,

With a rosy cheek and soft whisper, S he beckons the tardy Spring."

d) Rhythm and Rhyme, so characteristic of verse, have no place in prose and must be avoided in paraphrasing.

Method of Procedure:

1) To paraphrase a passage effectively, one must first read it slowly and carefully until the general meaning is firmly grasped.

2) Then, read the passage again to understand its details, including any uncommon or difficult words, idioms, unusual grammatical constructions, metaphors, and figures of speech.

© Amity University Online

Notes

3) After understanding the main purpose of the passage, prepare to reproduce it in your own words, using simple and direct English, ensuring that nothing from the original is left unrepresented.

4) Consider the passage as a whole, keeping the end in view, and avoid working word-by-word or line-by-line.

5) Rearrange sentences or the entire passage if needed to make the meaning clear.

6) If it helps in better understanding, break up long sentences into shorter ones or combine short sentences into longer ones.

7) Avoid changing words for the sake of change, especially when the original word is simple and appropriate. However, replace archaic, obscure, technical, or uncommon words and phrases with suitable synonyms.

8) Explanatory notes should not be included in the paraphrase. All explanations of difficulties must be incorporated into the paraphrase itself.

9) When using indirect speech, avoid constant repetition of the "saying verb." The "verb of saying" should come once, at the beginning, if used at all.

10) After putting in the effort, if you believe your paraphrase is as good as you can make it, write out the fair copy neatly and legibly.

Specimen:

Is there any man so devoid of life,
Who has never whispered to himself,
"This is my own, my native land"?
Whose heart has never burned within him,
As he turned his steps homeward,
From wandering in foreign lands?
If such a person exists, go and mark him as wretched;
For him, no minstrel raptures shall arise;
Despite his lofty titles and proud name,
His wealth is boundless, as his desires claim.
Yet, those titles, power, and wealth,
The wretch, focused solely on himself,
Shall forfeit fair renown in his living,
And in death, he shall go down,
To the vile dust, from whence he sprung.
Unwept, unhooked, and unsung.

Paraphrase

It is hard to fathom that any individual could lack the spiritual connection and love for their native land after experiencing foreign lands. However, if such an unpatriotic

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

person does indeed exist, observe their path closely, and you will find that they will never be immortalised in poetic verses. They may possess high social status, noble lineage, and immense wealth, but these advantages will not shield them from obscurity. Despite all their privileges, they won't achieve fame during their lifetime, and when they pass away, they will fade away into oblivion. No one will shed tears for them, no one will honor their memory, and no poet will preserve their name in everlasting poetry.

Summarising

Summarising is the second crucial communication skill in the repetitive cycle of Listening - Summarising - Questioning, promoting Effective Communication and Conflict Resolution.

Imagine a lady walking down the road, approached by someone in a car who asks for directions to the hospital. She provides clear directions, and the person summarises them back to confirm understanding.

Unfortunately, summarising is often overlooked in everyday communication, leading to misunderstandings. In contrast, professional fields like mediation emphasize its importance. A good summary maintains the speaker's ownership of their words and helps them gain insights into their thoughts and feelings.

However, people frequently assume they know what others are feeling, leading to ineffective communication. Instead, we should ask directly to understand their emotions better.

Summarising is not a high-pressure activity; it allows both the speaker and the listener to improve their communication skills.

An effective summary lets the speaker "hear themselves" and gain a clearer perspective on their thoughts and feelings, especially in challenging situations. This process aids creativity and problem-solving in various settings, including mediation.

Summarising becomes a co-operative cycle, enhancing the effectiveness of communication and fostering a deeper understanding between the speaker and the listener

To sum up:

- A summary uses the speaker's words, maintaining their ownership of the communication.
- It supports creativity by replaying a situation using the speaker's own words.
- Summarising improves the quality of communication and promotes collaboration.
- A summary does not include advice or personal interpretation.
- Summarising is highly beneficial in all forms of communication, from casual conversations to professional settings

Precis Writing

Précis writing, derived from the French word "précis" meaning "summary," involves Summarising a passage in as few words as possible while capturing its main theme

© Amity University Online

Notes

clearly and concisely. This exercise in compression is distinct from paraphrasing, which reproduces both substance and details of a passage and often results in a longer text. On the contrary, a précis should be much shorter than the original, including only essential points and omitting unimportant details.

The Uses of Précis Writing:

1) Précis writing improves reading skills by requiring focused attention to grasp the meaning of the passage. It tests one's ability to recall and reproduce the substance of the text accurately.
2) It enhances writing composition by teaching clarity, conciseness, and effectiveness in expressing thoughts. It helps overcome vagueness and disorganised writing, promoting logical and coherent presentation.
3) Précis writing holds practical value in various professions, like law, business, and government, where the ability to quickly grasp and summarise information is crucial

Method of Procedure:

1) Reading:
   - Read the passage carefully to grasp its general meaning and subject.
   - Assign a suitable title or identify a key sentence that reflects the main theme.
   - Reread the passage to understand its details and the author's intent.
   - Determine essential and unimportant parts of the passage, taking notes of the key points.
2) Writing:
   - Begin with a rough draft, attempting to express the essence of the passage within the required length.
   - Use your own words for the précis, avoiding direct quotes.
   - Ensure the précis is complete, self-contained, and in clear, grammatical English.
   - Aim to remodel sentences instead of merely omitting text to achieve concise compression.
   - Use indirect speech, following a verb of saying in the past tense, unless otherwise specified.
3) Revision:
   - Carefully revise the draft, comparing it with the original to ensure essential points are included.
   - If the précis is too long, further compress it by removing unnecessary words or remodeling sentences.
   - Write the final fair copy neatly, including the selected title at the beginning.

Example:

Original Passage:

"One great defect of our civilisation is that it does not know what to do with its

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

knowledge. Science, as we have seen, has given us powers fit for the gods, yet we use them like small children. For example, we do not know how to manage our machines. Machines were made to be man's servant; yet he has grown so dependent on them that they are in a way becoming his masters. Already most men spend most of their lives looking after and waiting upon machines. And the machines are very stern masters; they must be fed with coal, and given petrol to drink and oil to wash with and must be kept at the right temperature. And if they don't get their meals when they expect them, they grow sulky and refuse to work, or burst with rage, and blow up, and spread ruin and destruction all around them. So, we have to wait upon them very attentively and do all that we can to keep them in a good temper. Already we find it difficult either to work or play without machines, and a time may come when they will rule us altogether, just as we rule the animals."

Men and Machines

Our civilisation lacks direction for its knowledge. Science has granted us god-like powers, but we use them carelessly. The problem lies in managing machines; meant to serve us, we now rely heavily on them, risking their dominance over us. Men spend much time caring for machines, which demand constant attention and care. Should they be neglected, chaos ensues. We already struggle to function without machines, and eventually, they may control us, as we do animals.

In conclusion, précis writing is an exercise that demands intensive brainwork, and one must carefully follow the steps of reading, writing, and revising to achieve an effective summary within the prescribed limits.

2.1.4 Enhancing Expression: Synonyms, Nominalisation and Voice Usage

There are a few techniques that prove invaluable in essay writing. These techniques are essential for effectively conveying another person's ideas, preventing plagiarism, and constructing a coherent argument.

The first technique, synonyms, involves using words with similar meanings to maintain variety and clarity in writing. However, exercise caution to avoid altering key terms crucial to the text's meaning, and ensure the selected synonyms align with the text's register.

The second technique, nominalisation, enhances formality by transforming verb phrases into noun phrases, often by appending suffixes like 'ing', 'tion', or 'ance' to root words.

The last technique is the usage of active and passive voice. The active voice presents sentences in the subject-verb-object order, whereas the passive voice reverses this, lending a more impersonal tone suitable for formal writing.

To illustrate these techniques in practice, consider the original text: "Profits have risen steadily in the first quarter. This may be due to several reasons. One reason could be the hot weather, which means people spend more time outside. This department will carry out interviews with customers to find out more about this."

© Amity University Online

Notes

Now, observe the reformulated version, which maintains the same concepts while applying these techniques: "The first quarter has shown an increase in profits. This can be explained by several reasons. Customers spending more time outside is caused by the hot weather, for one. Interviews will be conducted by this department to examine this topic further."

These techniques are powerful tools for enhancing your writing, enabling clear communication of ideas while maintaining academic integrity.

Summary

- Written communication involves conveying information, ideas, and thoughts using written words.
- An essay should have a unified focus, centered around one theme and serving a specific purpose.
- The subject of the essay must be clearly defined and maintained throughout, without allowing irrelevant content.
- A précis is a concise expression of the main theme or essence of a passage, aiming to be clear and succinct.
- Summarizing is a vital skill in effective communication, forming part of the iterative process of listening.
- In paraphrasing, the passage should be treated as a whole; simply changing individual lines or sentences does not qualify as true paraphrasing.
- A well-constructed paraphrase should read as a complete and independent composition in natural English.

Glossary

- Essay writing- Essay writing refers to the process of crafting a coherent and well-structured piece of writing.
- Precis writing- Precis writing involves condensing a longer piece of text, such as an article, a passage, or a book, into a concise and summarised form while retaining its core ideas and main points.
- Summarising- Summarising refers to the process of providing a concise overview of the main ideas, key points, and essential details of a longer piece of text.
- Paraphrasing- Paraphrasing involves rewording or restating someone else's ideas, information, or statements in your own words while retaining the original meaning.

Check Your Understanding

1. Which of the following options represents the correct structure for an essay?
   a) Introduction, body paragraphs, conclusion
   b) Body paragraphs, introduction, conclusion
   c) Conclusion, introduction, body paragraphs
   d) Introduction, conclusion, body paragraphs

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

2. What is the purpose of an essay introduction?
   a) To provide a summary of the main points
   b) To present the thesis statement and engage the reader
   c) To restate the thesis statement and conclude the essay
   d) To offer supporting evidence and examples
3. Which of the following should be included in the body paragraphs of an essay?
   a) Main ideas and arguments
   b) Thesis statement
   c) Introduction
   d) Conclusion
4. What is the purpose of a conclusion in an essay?
   a) To introduce the topic and engage the reader
   b) To present the thesis statement and main arguments
   c) To restate the main points and provide a sense of closure
   d) To provide supporting evidence and examples
5. Which of the following is an example of a primary source for research in an essay?
   a) A scholarly journal article analyzing the topic
   b) A book written by an expert in the field
   c) A personal interview with a relevant industry professional
   d) An online encyclopedia entry about the subject
6. What is the purpose of proofreading and editing an essay?
   a) To make the essay longer and more detailed
   b) To remove any unnecessary or irrelevant information
   c) To check for errors in grammar, punctuation, and spelling
   d) To rewrite the entire essay to improve its structure
7. Which of the following is an effective strategy for improving the clarity and coherence of an essay?
   a) Using complex vocabulary and jargon
   b) Including as many ideas and examples as possible
   c) Organizing ideas logically and using transitional words
   d) Writing in a passive voice to sound more formal
8. What is the importance of revising an essay?
   a) To check for errors and improve the overall quality
   b) To change the main thesis statement and arguments
   c) To delete all the sources used in the essay

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

d) To add more personal opinions and experiences

9. What is the primary goal of summarizing a document?

a) To shorten the document

b) To paraphrase the document

c) To capture the main ideas and key points

d) To add personal opinions

10. When summarizing a document, which of the following should be included?

a) All details and examples from the original document

b) Personal opinions and biases

c) Only the main ideas and key points

d) New information not present in the original document

11. Which of the following is a characteristic of a well-written summary?

a) Including all supporting evidence and examples

b) Being longer than the original document

c) Expressing personal opinions and biases

d) Capturing the main ideas concisely

12. Which of the following is an effective strategy for writing a precise business message?

a) Using technical jargon to demonstrate expertise

b) Including irrelevant details to provide context

c) Using clear and concise language

d) Avoiding bullet points and numbered lists

13. What is the primary purpose of precise writing in business communication?

a) To confuse the reader with complex language

b) To showcase the writer's intelligence

c) To convey information accurately and efficiently

d) To fill the document with unnecessary details

14. Which of the following is a characteristic of precise writing?

a) Lengthy and elaborate sentences

b) Use of vague and ambiguous language

c) Clear and concise expression of ideas

d) Inclusion of personal anecdotes and stories

15. Which of the following techniques can help in achieving precision in writing?

a) Repetition of ideas to reinforce the message

b) Use of complex vocabulary to impress the reader

c) Elimination of unnecessary words and phrases

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

d) Adding excessive examples and illustrations

16. Which of the following sentences demonstrates precise writing?

a) "The meeting will take place on Tuesday, at 2:00 p.m., in the conference room, located on the third floor."

b) "Our company has scheduled a meeting next week, but we haven't decided on the exact date yet."

c) "Let's plan a meeting sometime next week, maybe in the afternoon or morning, depending on everyone's availability."

d) "The meeting might be scheduled for sometime next week, but we're not sure about the exact time or location yet."

17. Paraphrasing refers to:

a) Copying someone else's work

b) Summarizing someone else's work

c) Rephrasing someone else's work

d) Referencing someone else's work

18. Which of the following is the best definition of paraphrasing?

a) Using direct quotes from a source

b) Changing a few words in a sentence without changing the meaning

c) Rewriting a passage in your own words while maintaining the original meaning

d) Adding new information to an existing text

19. Which of the following techniques is NOT helpful when paraphrasing?

a) Using synonyms or alternative phrases

b) Rearranging the sentence structure

c) Adding personal opinions and biases

d) Changing the word form (e.g., from noun to verb)

20. When paraphrasing, it is essential to:

a) Cite the original source

b) Use the exact same words as the original source

c) Avoid changing the sentence structure

d) Only paraphrase long passages

Exercise

Essay writing

Write short essays on

1. Old custom
2. School games
3. Should boys learn to cook?

© Amity University Online

Notes

4. Travel as a part of education
5. Indian in 2021
6. Pocket-money
7. Airplanes
8. Street Hawkers
9. The internet
10. Pollution

Précis Writing

Write summaries of the following passages of about one-third of the original length.

1. In every country people imagine that they are the best, stand the cleverest and the others are not so good as are not so good as they are. The Englishman thinks that he and his country are the best; the Frenchman is very proud of France and everything French. The Germans and Italians think no less of their countries and many Indians imagine that India is in many ways the greatest country in the world. This is wrong. Everybody wants to think well of himself and his country. But really there is no person who has not got some good and some bad qualities. In the same way, there is no country, which is not partly good and partly bad. We must take the good wherever we find it and remove the bad wherever it may be. We are, of course, most concerned with our own country India. Unfortunately, it's in a bad way today. Many of our people are poor and unhappy. They have no joy in their lives. We have to find out how we can make them happier. We have to see what is good in our ways and customs and try to keep it, and whatever is bad we have to throw away. If we find anything good in other countries, we should certainly take it.
2. Over-eating is one of the most wonderful practices among those who think that they can afford it. In fact, authorities say that nearly all who can get as much as they desire, over-eat to their disadvantage. This class of people could save a great more food than they can save by missing one meal per week and at the same time they could improve their health.

   A heavy meal at night, the so-called "dinner", is the fashion with many and often it is taken shortly before retiring. It is unnecessary and could be forgone, not only once a week but daily without loss of strength. From three to five hours are needed you digest food. While sleeping, this food not being required to give energy for work, is in many cases converted into excess fat, giving rise to overweight. The evening meal should be light, taken three or four hours before retiring. This prevents overeating, conserves energy and reduces the cost of food.

Paraphrase the following:

1. Some murmur, when their sky is clear

   And wholly bright to view,

   If one small speck of dark appears

   In their great heaven of blue:

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

And some with thankful love are filled,

If but one streak of light,

One ray of God's good mercy, gild

The darkness of their night. – Trench

2. More things are wrought by prayer

Then this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice

Rise like a fountain for me night and day.

For what are men better than sheep of goats

That nourishes a blind like within the brain,

If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer.

Both of themselves and those who call them friends! -Tennyson

3. If misery be the effect of virtue, it ought to be reverenced; if of ill-fortune, to be pitied; and if of vice, not to be insulted; because it is, perhaps, itself a punishment adequate to the crime by which it was produced; and the humanity of that man can deserve no panegyric who is capable of reproaching a criminal in the hands of executioner.

- Johnson

Answers: Essay writing

Essay: Old Custom

Old customs have held a profound place in the hearts of people across different countries and cultures. Often considered as a representation of heritage and identity, these traditions are cherished for their historical significance. However, there is a tendency for individuals in each country to believe that they are superior to others and that their customs are superior as well.

This kind of thinking is flawed. While it is natural for people to take pride in their culture, it is essential to Recognise that every country and its people possess both positive and negative attributes. No individual or nation is entirely good or bad. Instead of promoting superiority, we should embrace humility and acknowledge the good aspects of various customs while discarding any harmful or outdated practices.

Concerning India, the focus should be on introspection and betterment. India, like any other country, has its strengths and weaknesses. The goal should be to identify the issues faced by its citizens, particularly those who are impoverished and unhappy, and work towards finding solutions to improve their lives. This requires an open-minded approach, willing to learn from the good in other nations and implement positive changes.

In conclusion, while old customs have their place in shaping a nation's culture, it is crucial to abandon notions of superiority and embrace humility and open-mindedness. India must look within, Recognising both its strengths and weaknesses, to improve the well-being of its people and make the country a better place for everyone.

© Amity University Online

Notes

School games play a pivotal role in the overall development of students, going beyond academics to instill essential life skills and values. Engaging in sports and games not only promotes physical fitness but also nurtures mental and social growth.

Physical activity is vital for maintaining a healthy lifestyle, and school games provide an excellent platform for students to stay active and fit. Moreover, participation in team sports fosters teamwork, communication, and leadership skills, which are invaluable for personal and professional life.

The benefits of school games extend to mental well-being as well. Physical activity releases endorphins, reducing stress and improving concentration and focus. Additionally, students learn to cope with victory and defeat, cultivating resilience and sportsmanship.

From a social perspective, school games promote inclusivity and camaraderie among students. Regardless of their backgrounds, students come together in the spirit of competition and friendship. This interaction breaks down barriers and nurtures a sense of unity and understanding among peers.

In conclusion, school games are an integral part of a comprehensive education, nurturing physical health, mental well-being, and social skills. Encouraging and supporting such activities in schools not only promotes healthy living but also prepares students for the challenges of life ahead.

Essay: Should Boys Learn to Cook?

In the modern era, the idea that cooking is solely a woman's responsibility is outdated and unjust. Learning to cook is a valuable life skill that should be imparted to all individuals, regardless of gender. Hence, it is essential for boys to learn how to cook.

Cooking is not merely about preparing meals; it is a fundamental aspect of self-sufficiency and independence. Being able to cook empowers individuals to provide for themselves, make healthier food choices, and develop an appreciation for different cuisines. Furthermore, cooking can be a creative and enjoyable experience. By encouraging boys to learn to cook, we open doors to potential passions and careers in culinary arts. Additionally, this skill fosters empathy and equality in relationships, as sharing household responsibilities promotes a more equitable and harmonious environment. In conclusion, boys should undoubtedly learn to cook to equip themselves with essential life skills and contribute to breaking gender stereotypes. Embracing cooking as a universal skill benefits individuals, relationships, and society as a whole.

Essay: Travel as a Part of Education

Traveling is a powerful form of education that extends beyond the boundaries of classrooms. Experiencing different cultures, landscapes, and people enriches one's understanding of the world and fosters personal growth. Through travel, individuals gain practical knowledge and insights that textbooks cannot provide. Interacting with diverse communities and immersing oneself in new environments cultivates empathy, open-mindedness, and tolerance. These experiences contribute to becoming well-rounded global citizens.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

Moreover, travel offers unique opportunities for learning about history, art, and architecture. Visiting historical landmarks and museums provides tangible connections to the past, making learning more engaging and memorable. Another aspect of travel is the development of essential life skills. Navigating through unfamiliar places, managing budgets, and problem-solving during travel foster independence and adaptability. In conclusion, travel is an invaluable component of education, offering experiential learning that goes beyond academic knowledge. It broadens horizons, nurtures empathy, and equips individuals with the skills necessary to thrive in an interconnected world.

Essay: India in 2021

As of 2021, India remains a country of immense diversity, complexity, and potential. With a rich history and cultural heritage, India has made significant strides in various sectors, becoming a global player in technology, economy, and academia.

However, India also grapples with pressing challenges, such as poverty, inequality, and environmental issues. Despite considerable economic growth, many Indians still struggle to access basic necessities and opportunities, leading to a stark wealth disparity.

Technological advancements have empowered a burgeoning middle class and connected millions of people across the nation. Yet, the digital divide remains a concern, as many rural and marginalised communities lack adequate access to technology and the internet.

In 2021, India faced significant hurdles during the COVID-19 pandemic, testing its healthcare infrastructure and resilience. The crisis underscored the importance of prioritising healthcare, education, and social welfare to strengthen the nation's future.

In conclusion, India in 2021 is a nation with vast potential, grappling with a myriad of challenges. To unlock its full promise, India must address its social disparities and invest in education, healthcare, and sustainable development.

Essay: Pocket-Money

Pocket-money, often given to children by parents, serves as a valuable tool in teaching financial responsibility and independence from an early age.

Receiving pocket-money allows children to learn the value of money and the importance of budgeting. They must prioritise their spending, whether on toys, snacks, or saving for future purchases. This financial decision-making process nurtures essential life skills that will serve them well into adulthood. Furthermore, pocket-money grants children a degree of independence in managing their expenses. They learn to be accountable for their choices and consequences, fostering a sense of ownership and responsibility.

However, it is essential for parents to strike a balance in the amount of pocket-money given. Excessive money may lead to wasteful spending habits, while too little might not provide sufficient opportunities for learning and exploration.

© Amity University Online

Notes

In conclusion, pocket-money is a valuable educational tool that instills financial responsibility and independence in children. When managed effectively, it equips them with practical skills that will benefit their personal and financial growth in the future.

Essay: Airplanes

Airplanes revolutionised the way people travel and opened up a world of possibilities for global connectivity and trade. From their inception, airplanes have played a critical role in shaping modern transportation and have become an integral part of contemporary life. Air travel offers unparalleled speed and efficiency, enabling people to traverse vast distances in a matter of hours. It has connected cities, countries, and continents, facilitating international trade, tourism, and cultural exchange.

Moreover, airplanes have transformed rescue and relief operations during emergencies, as they provide swift access to remote areas that are otherwise difficult to reach. They have also been instrumental in medical evacuations and transporting essential supplies during disasters.

1) Précis: National Pride and Self-Reflection

   People in every country tend to believe that they and their homeland are superior to others. This notion prevails among Englishmen, Frenchmen, Germans, Italians, and Indians. Such beliefs are misguided, as every individual and nation possess both positive and negative qualities. It is essential to acknowledge this reality and embrace humility. India, in particular, faces challenges today, with many of its people living in poverty and unhappiness. To make the nation happier and prosperous, one must Recognise the good aspects of its ways and customs and discard the harmful ones. Additionally, learning from the positive aspects of other countries can contribute to India's growth and progress.

2) Précis: The Consequences of Over-Eating

   Over-eating, a practice common among those who can afford it, has detrimental effects. Authorities warn that nearly all who overindulge suffer from its disadvantages. Saving excess food, especially by skipping one meal per week, can improve health significantly. The habit of heavy dinners, often eaten just before sleep, is unnecessary and can be avoided without weakening the body. Digestion takes three to five hours, and when sleeping, the excess food turns into unwanted fat, leading to weight gain. Opting for light evening meals three to four hours before bedtime prevents overeating, preserves energy, and reduces food expenses.

Paraphrase the following

1) Paraphrase:

   Some people grumble when the sky is clear and bright, even if a tiny dark spot appears in their otherwise vast expanse of blue. On the other hand, there are those who feel grateful and full of love when a single streak of light, a ray of God's mercy, illuminates the darkness of their night.

2) Paraphrase:

   Prayer has the power to achieve more than what the world can imagine.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Therefore, raise your voice like a fountain, praying day and night. If people, knowing God, do not engage in prayer, they are no better than ignorant beings, as prayer nourishes the soul within the brain. It applies to both themselves and those they consider friends.

3) Paraphrase:

If misery results from virtuous actions, it should be respected. If it arises from ill-fortune, it deserves pity. However, if misery stems from vice, it should not be insulted, as it might already be an appropriate punishment for the crime committed. A person who reproaches a criminal in the hands of an executioner cannot be considered humane and does not deserve praise.

Learning Activities

1. Discuss the role of evidence and examples in supporting arguments within an essay and how they strengthen written communication.
2. What strategies can be employed to effectively summarize a complex piece of text while maintaining its main ideas and key points?
3. How does paraphrasing contribute to effective written communication and why is it important to avoid plagiarism?
4. Discuss the importance of proofreading and editing in improving written communication skills, particularly in the context of essay writing.

Check Your Understanding- Answers

1. b) To present the thesis statement and engage the reader
2. a) Main ideas and arguments
3. c) To restate the main points and provide a sense of closure
4. c) A personal interview with a relevant industry professional
5. c) To check for errors in grammar, punctuation, and spelling
6. c) Organizing ideas logically and using transitional words
7. a) To check for errors and improve the overall quality
8. c) To capture the main ideas and key points
9. c) Only the main ideas and key points
10. d) Capturing the main ideas concisely
11. c) Using clear and concise language
12. c) To convey information accurately and efficiently
13. c) Clear and concise expression of ideas
14. c) Elimination of unnecessary words and phrases
15. a) “The meeting will take place on Tuesday, at 2:00 p.m., in the conference room, located on the third floor.”
16. c) Rephrasing someone else’s work

© Amity University Online

Notes

17. c) Rewriting a passage in your own words while maintaining the original meaning
18. c) Adding personal opinions and biases
19. a) Cite the original source

Further Reading and Bibliography

1. Essay Writing Booklet (FINAL) Web Version.pdf (anu.edu.au)
2. Academic Writing: A Basic Survival Guide for Students by ANDRÉ BROOME https://warwick.ac.uk/fac/soc/pais/people/broome/writing.pdf
3. "DEVELOPING COMMUNICATION SKILLS THROUGH EXPOSITORY WRITING FOR TEACHER EDUCATORS" by J. Augustus Richard. https://www.shanlaxjournals.in/pdf/ASH/V3N3/Ash_V3_N3_022.pdf
4. Unit-14.pdf (egyankosh.ac.in)
5. Business Communication: https://www.icsi.edu/media/webmodules/CSEET/BUSINESS_COMMUNICATION.pdf

(c) Amity University Online

Module - 3: Concept and Nature of Communication

Notes

Learning Objectives:

By the end of this module, you will have the ability to:

- Recognize the significance of communication within a business setting.
- Identify various types of listening and employ effective listening strategies.
- Comprehend the functions of non-verbal communication in both personal and professional contexts.

Introduction:

Communication is an indispensable aspect of human interaction, playing a pivotal role in our daily lives. It involves the exchange of information, ideas, thoughts, and emotions, enabling the transfer and reception of messages among individuals and groups. Communication manifests in diverse forms, including verbal, nonverbal, written, and visual, and takes place through multiple channels, such as speech, writing, body language, facial expressions, gestures, and technology-mediated platforms.

3.1 Concept and Nature of Communication

3.1.1 What is Communication?

Communication can be defined as the process of transmitting information and understanding between individuals. The term "communication" originates from the Latin word "communis," meaning common, and encompasses the exchange and interaction of ideas, facts, opinions, feelings, or attitudes.

Lelan Brown defines communication as the interchange of facts, ideas, feelings, or courses of action. Shared culture, common interests, a shared symbolic environment, and social relationships among participants foster commonality in communication. Effective communication involves delivering messages in a manner that recipients can easily understand and accept.

The core aspect of communication lies in inferring another person's ideas or feelings from their behaviour, such as speech, gestures, or posture. Denis McQuail refers to this as "human communication," encompassing various elements like clothing, customs, traditions, gestures, flags, buildings, and gardens, all of which play a vital role in communication.

Communication is central to socialisation, fostering communicative interactions. For George H. Mead, socialisation involves the emergence and gradual development of the self or ego, which arises from communicative contact with others. The self becomes both a subject and an object, capable of self-reflection and self-consciousness through understanding others' perspectives.

Symbolic communication plays a crucial role in understanding attitudes, as attitudes are known through symbolic mechanisms. Children must learn to use symbols to comprehend others' attitudes and communicate their reactions based on their imagined judgments. The self is a social structure that arises from social experiences.

© Amity University Online

Notes

Communication involves the ego or self as the agent of action, rather than merely the actor's physical body. The ego possesses awareness, experiences, makes decisions, and reflects on those decisions, integrating past events and imagining future ones. This ego is a unique characteristic of highly integrated organisms, especially humans, due to their capacity for symbolic communication.

Human society exhibits a peculiar characteristic through symbolic communication, namely legitimacy or the normative aspect. Normative ideas exist in individuals' minds and influence external events by being communicated as judgments on conduct.

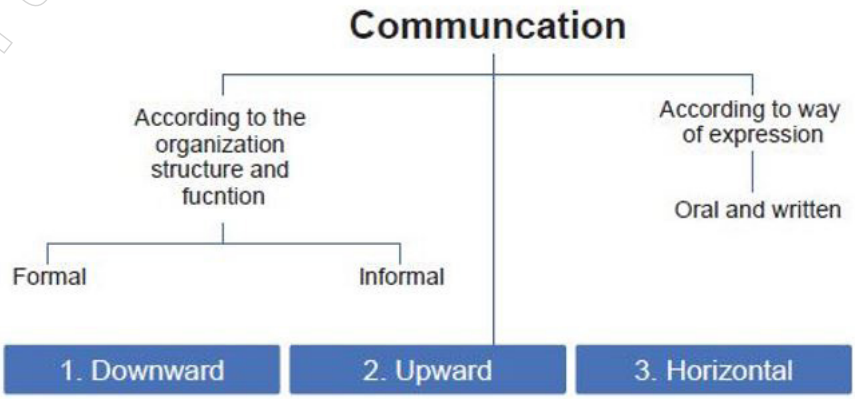
In terms of types of communication, it can be categorised into verbal and non-verbal, mediated and non-mediated, participatory and non-participatory, and interpersonal and intrapersonal. Interpersonal communication involves face-to-face interactions between individuals and is characterised by directness, intimacy, and personal connection through words, gestures, and the five senses.

3.1.2 Stages of Communication

Communication Objectives:

1) Foster Cooperation: The primary objective is to overcome suspicion and resistance from the recipient. The approach should clearly convey the purpose and rationale, creating an environment where the person can respond without fear.
2) Ensure Understanding: Establishing a common agreement on the interpretation of instructions, questions, and responses is crucial. This may involve addressing challenges arising from regional, racial, and cultural differences.
3) Enhance Useful Responses: Encourage relevant responses at appropriate points to maximise the usefulness of the communication.
4) Avoid Errors: Prevent errors stemming from body language, language usage, and emotional interference. Factors such as fatigue, confusion, inconvenience, indifference, and perceived threats to one's prestige or privacy can lead to such situations.

The Communication Model



Communicator: The individual or source initiating the message.

Message: The collection of meanings conveyed to the audience or recipients.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

Channels: The various means through which messages are delivered to the audience.

Audience: The recipients or destination of the message. Aristotle emphasised the importance of considering the audience in communication planning centuries ago, as it influences the type of oratory used, such as political, deliberative, forensic, or epideictic, based on their characteristics and susceptibility.

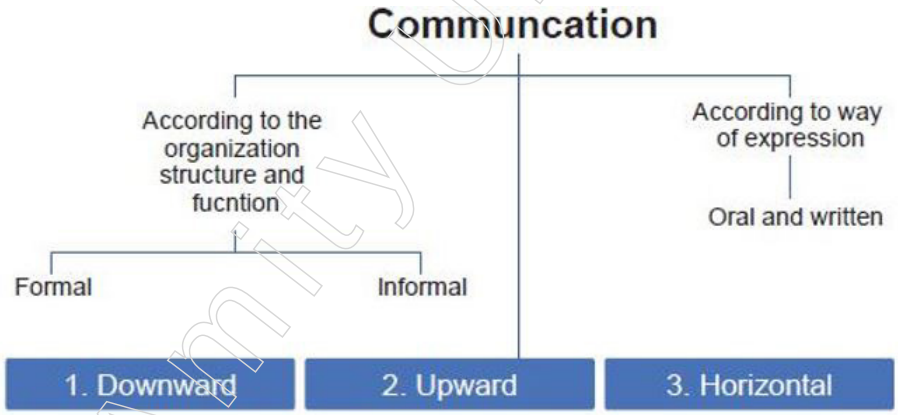
The communicator must prioritise the audience since it determines what, how, when, where, and who delivers the message.

While listening to a speaker, the very first sentence triggers a conversation within the listener, leading to agreement or disagreement. The ability to listen without preconceived notions or thoughts is a valuable skill. Perception, observation, and expression are vital aspects of life, and attending to one's body and breath is crucial. Understanding the secrets of breath helps regulate emotional disturbances. Memory, intellect, and ego are other faculties that play significant roles in shaping our experiences.

According to Cole and Chan, the communication process typically involves distinct stages:

1) Formulation of the message,
2) Message encoding,
3) Message transmission,
4) Message decoding and interpretation, and
5) Feedback and evaluation.

The process of effective two-way communication is given below



Formulation of Message

It is relevant to invoke the slogan "Medium is the Message" attributed to Marshall McLuhan, suggesting that the means through which communication is conveyed - whether through spoken words, visuals, or digital text - holds a substantial influence over the message, the sender, the audience, and the impact of mass media. This notion is particularly evident given the advancements in multimedia technology. Consequently, the effectiveness of communication hinges upon both the content and manner of expression.

© Amity University Online

Notes

a) Initiating the communication process involves conveying an idea or message to the intended individual, aiming for a favorable response. The communicator, who can be the sender or encoder, plays a crucial role in this process.

b) A message consists of both verbal and non-verbal cues transmitted by a source.

These cues encompass spoken or written words, gestures, movements, and more. The meaning of messages is intrinsically tied to the individuals involved in the sending and receiving process.

c) The effectiveness of communication relies on the communicator's skills, level of knowledge, and attitude, as well as their intention to influence the recipient. Being able to think, organise thoughts swiftly, and express oneself effectively are among the qualities of a proficient communicator.

d) In order to convey their idea, the communicator meticulously formulates a coherent and meaningful sentence.

Message Encoding

a) Message formulation involves the internal process of shaping, Organising, and refining ideas to ensure clarity and coherence. The ultimate goal is to create a message that is both clear and meaningful to the intended audience.

b) Encoding is the conversion of an idea into a suitable format for communication with recipients.

c) Alongside translating their purpose into a message, communicators also choose the appropriate medium for conveying their intended message.

d) It is essential for communicators to select a medium (e.g., speech, writing, gestures) that the recipients can easily comprehend. For instance, an illiterate individual may struggle with written messages but can understand oral communication effectively.

Message Transmission

a) This stage is pivotal in the communication process as it determines the method of message delivery. The sender carefully selects a suitable channel or mode of presentation.

b) The term 'channel' refers to the medium or method through which a message or stimulus is conveyed from the sender to the receiver. Numerous options exist, including written, spoken, verbal, non-verbal, and mass media channels. For example, a teacher might use a film or physical demonstration to convey the same concept, employing multiple channels to facilitate an integrated presentation.

Message Decoding and Interpretation

a) Decoding involves the receiver's interpretation of a message. Essentially, the receiver seeks to derive shared meaning from the message, actively engaging in the process of decoding rather than being passive. Language itself does not possess inherent meaning, but rather the potential for meaning. Therefore, it is the responsibility of the decoder to actively participate in decoding and comprehending the message based on their ability to do so.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

b) When the receiver possesses background information and familiarity with the language used, it facilitates easier decoding and comprehension of the message.

c) Inability to listen, read, and think hinders the receiver's capacity to receive and decode messages in accordance with the communicator's intentions.

d) The receiver holds paramount importance as the key link in the communication process for achieving effective communication.

Feedback and Evaluation

a) Feedback refers to the recipient's acknowledgement of the sender's message, and communication can only truly occur when the recipient responds.

b) It involves the recipient's reaction to the transmitted messages and conveying their response back to the sender.

c) Effective communication often encourages feedback, allowing for adjustments in message content and presentation based on the received feedback.

d) Through gestures like fluttering eyelids, raising an eyebrow, making facial expressions, Organising a point, or seeking clarification, a significant amount is expressed. Consequently, the message is continuously shaped and refined by both the sender and recipient until its meaning becomes clear.

e) Thus, feedback offers an opportunity to evaluate the effectiveness of a specific communication, regulating the conversation among two or more individuals, while also stimulating and reinforcing desired ideas.

Noise

Noise can disrupt the communication process at any point, rendering it ineffective. Environmental factors, such as roadside noises, constant chatter, loudspeakers, or faulty transmissions, can interfere with message reception. Other forms of noise include poor handwriting, heavy accents, poor speech, or communication in poorly lit rooms. These barriers need to be addressed to ensure effective communication by minimising or eliminating noise.

Noise can be categorized into the following types:

1) Physiological noise
2) Physical noise
3) Psychological noise
4) Semantic noise

Classification of Communication:

1) Based on organizational structure and function:
   a) Formal communication
   b) Informal communication
2) Based on the direction of flow:
   a) Downward communication

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

b) Upward communication

c) Horizontal communication or lateral communication or crosswise communication

3) Based on the mode of expression:

a) Oral or verbal communication

b) Written communication or black and white communication

3.1.3 Channels of Communication

Classification of Communication:

Communication can be classified into various categories based on different criteria:

1) Organizational Structure and Function:

a) Formal Communication

b) Informal Communication

2) Direction of Flow:

a) Downward Communication

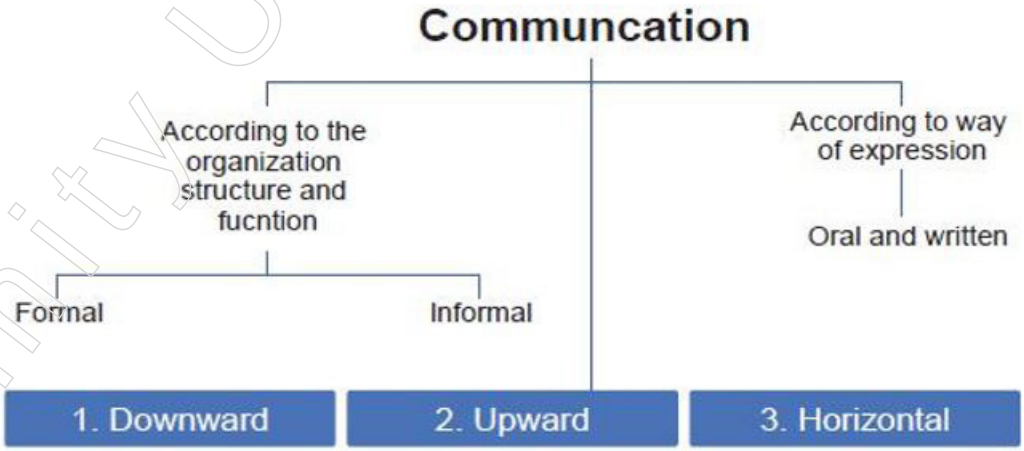
b) Upward Communication

c) Horizontal Communication or Lateral Communication or Crosswise Communication

3) Mode of Expression:

a) Oral or Verbal Communication

b) Written Communication or Black and White Communication



Formal communication within an organization can take four forms, flowing in three different directions:

1. Downward Communication: This involves higher-level authorities communicating information to lower-level employees, including instructions, orders, and important organisational information. It fosters a sense of loyalty and engagement among employees. Downward communication uses channels like handbooks, reports, memos, and meetings.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

2. Upward Communication: In contrast, upward communication enables lower-level employees to convey information, feedback, and concerns to higher-level authorities. It helps management stay informed and allows for better decision-making. Upward communication occurs through channels like feedback forms, surveys, meetings, and emails.
3. Horizontal Communication: This type of communication occurs among individualsat the same level of authority within the organisation. It facilitates collaboration and coordination between departments or teams. Horizontal communication relies on channels such as team meetings, group emails, and informal discussions.
4. Diagonal Communication: Diagonal communication involves communication between individuals who are not in the same department or hierarchy. It allows for cross-functional exchange of information and is used when traditional channels are not suitable. Diagonal communication can take place through meetings, direct requests, or informal interactions.

3.1.4 Communication in Organisation Setting

Types and Levels of Communication i n Organisations

Effective communication within a business organisation relies on timely delivery of essential information to the concerned individuals when needed for decision-making. The communication system should support overall management and coordination of the workforce to achieve organisational objectives. To facilitate this, Organisations establish channels through which information flows between different levels of authority and functional units. The flow of communication follows the organisational structure, moving through different levels as shown in the diagram.

Vertical Communication:

Vertical communication in Organisations follows well-defined lines of transmission. Policy decisions are made at the top management level, and this information is communicated downwards to middle and lower-level managers or teams. Subordinates ensure the implementation, monitoring, and review of policies. In turn, feedback, performance data, and employee experiences are sent upwards. Key relationships in this type of communication are between managers and their subordinates, who exchange information both ways.

Horizontal Communication:

Horizontal communication refers to the exchange of information between departments or individuals at the same level of authority. It enables coordination between different departments, facilitating smooth workflow and interdepartmental collaboration. Each department operates independently while staying connected with others through peer group communication and workflow updates. With technological advancements, horizontal communication becomes crucial in large-scale production processes where various stages of production are interdependent.

Line and Staff Management:

Line and staff management structure exists in large Organisations, incorporating

© Amity University Online

Notes

both line managers responsible for core operations and staff managers overseeing support functions. An effective internal communication system establishes interactions between line management and staff management. The system can be categorised into formal and informal lines of communication.

Formal Communication:

Formal lines of communication encompass line, functional, and staff relationships. Line connections involve the flow of information from higher-ranking individuals to subordinates and vice versa. Functional relationships facilitate communication between departments, sharing work-related information and issues. Staff relationships support line management, marketing, and administration, although they lack managerial authority. Formal communication is essential for adhering to the established chain of command and ensuring effective information flow.

Informal Communication:

Informal communication occurs through conversations and the grapevine within the organisation. Informal communication may occur between managers of different departments or peers within the same level of authority. Employees often resort to informal communication when they feel uninformed within the formal system. Although the grapevine may complicate information flow, it can complement formal communication when managed effectively.

Communication for Management:

Effective communication is essential for professionals in business, industry, or academia. It influences decision-making and behaviour, whether persuading employees to support organisational goals or encouraging customers to purchase products. A well-planned communication strategy aims to influence desired thinking and behaviour in individuals critical to the success of an activity. Effective management communication involves both internal and external communication, fostering collaboration, and overcoming barriers to understanding

3.1.5 Barriers to Effective Communication: Part 1

1) Psychological Barrier:
   - Distrust of the communicator leading to poor judgment and illogical discussions
   - Anxiety and tension (moderate anxiety can enhance attention and performance)
   - Emotional state of the audience
   - Limited perception
   - Daydreaming
   - Past experiences influencing interpretation
   - Lack of motivation and interest
   - Inattention
   - Premature evaluation

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

- Failure to send or receive communication
- Poor transmission and retention

2) Social and Cultural Barrier:

- Audience heterogeneity based on social class, caste, religion, education, occupation, etc.
- Cultural barriers affecting language and word associations
- Social pressures and tensions

3) Technical Barriers:

- Malfunctioning equipment such as overhead projectors, cassette players, TVs, radios, and posters

4) Semantic Barrier:

- Problems with language use in oral and written communication
- Poorly chosen and empty words
- Careless omission
- Lack of coherence and organization of ideas
- Awkward sentence structure
- Inadequate vocabulary
- Platitudes and repetitions
- Jargon and lack of clarification of implications
- Subjective and objective meanings of words creating different images in people's minds.

3.1.6 Barriers to Effective Communication: Part 2

Barriers to Communication

1) Physical Barrier:

- Insufficient communication quality
- Language barrier
- Inappropriate channel selection and handling (e.g., unfamiliar media like maps and charts)
- Speech or voice defects
- Physical appearance
- Ineffective environment (e.g., high temperature, humidity, poor ventilation, glare)
- Noise disrupting communication
- Subjective stress (sleeplessness, ill health, drugs)

2) Organizational Barrier:

- Lack of specified duties and lines of authority
- Distance in communication

© Amity University Online

Notes

- Multiple layers of communication
- Lack of clear instructions
- Heavy communication load
- Rules and regulations
- Position and status influencing communication
- Inadequate facilities
- Complexity of the organization

3) Personal Barrier:

- Response towards superiors
- Attitudes towards authority
- Dissatisfaction and deprivation
- Failure to use the proper communication channel
- Cultural, educational, and emotional prejudices
- Sycophancy (yes-man behavior)
- Time constraints
- Experience of distrust
- Handling numerous messages

4) Miscellaneous Barrier:

a) Resistance to change and fear of being changed

b) Fear leading to partial or distorted communication

c) Distance and time inhibiting written communication to far-off places.

3.1.7 Guidelines to Overcome Communication Barriers

Improving Communication Barriers

Here are some guidelines to help you overcome communication barriers:

1. Use clear and concise language: Be mindful of your language and avoid using jargon,

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

technical terms, or ambiguous phrases that might confuse or alienate the listener. Choose your words carefully and keep your message simple and straightforward.

2. Active listening: Pay attention to the speaker and show genuine interest in what they are saying. Avoid interrupting or formulating your response before they finish speaking. Active listening involves maintaining eye contact, nodding, and using verbal cues like “I see,” or “Go on” to indicate your engagement.
3. Nonverbal communication: Communication is not just about words; nonverbal cues such as facial expressions, body language, and gestures play a vital role. Be aware of your own nonverbal signals and try to interpret those of others. Maintain an open and welcoming posture, make appropriate eye contact, and use gestures to support your message.
4. The roll of Feedback; Feedback is the terminating element in the process of communication, from where the cyclic flow of information start coming back to source. According to David Beklo, “If the source decodes the message, the message he has received than feedback that has taken place.” Feedback can be defined as message that indicates the level of understanding or agreement between two or more communications in response to an original message.
5. Clarify and ask questions: If you don’t understand something, don’t hesitate to ask for clarification. Repeat or rephrase what you heard to ensure you understood correctly. Asking questions demonstrates your interest and commitment to effective communication.
6. Be aware of cultural differences: Cultural differences can significantly impact communication. Be sensitive to diverse cultural norms, values, and communication styles. Avoid assumptions and stereotypes and educate yourself about different cultural practices to foster understanding and avoid potential misunderstandings.
7. Use visual aids and technology: Visual aids, such as diagrams, charts, or presentations, can enhance understanding and clarity. Utilize technology, such as video conferencing, instant messaging, or email, to overcome geographical barriers and facilitate communication in different contexts.

3.2 Listening and Non-verbal Communication

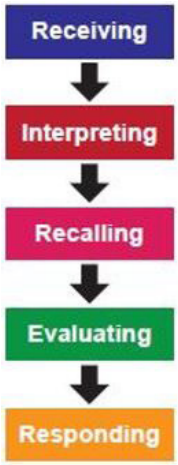
3.2.1 The Listening Process

The Listening Procedure

Listening is a dynamic process that involves receiving, interpreting, evaluating, and responding to both verbal and nonverbal messages. It is not a linear, step-by-step sequence, but rather a continuous and interactive procedure. While models of the listening process can provide valuable insights into its components, they may not fully capture the real-life complexity and fluidity of how listening occurs. Here are the stages of the listening process:

(c) Amity University Online

Notes



3.2.2 Types of Listening

Listening is a dynamic process that involves receiving, interpreting, evaluating, and responding to both verbal and nonverbal messages. Like the communication process, listening is not a straightforward sequence of steps but a continuous and interactive procedure. Models of the listening process provide useful insights into its components, but they may not fully capture the real-life complexity and fluidity of how listening occurs. Here are the stages of the listening process:

1. Receiving: Before engaging in other steps of the listening process, we must receive the information through our senses. Listening primarily occurs through auditory and visual channels. Visual cues, such as facial expressions and eye contact, complement auditory signals and influence how we interpret messages. Certain challenges arise in communication when these visual cues are absent in email, text, or phone conversations, making it difficult to grasp contextual information.
2. Interpreting: During the interpreting stage, we combine the auditory and visual information we receive to make sense of the message. This step involves understanding and connecting the information received to our previous experiences. Interpreting helps us comprehend the significance of the stimuli we have received.
3. Recalling: Our ability to recall information depends on the processes that take place in memory. Stimuli are processed and stored in short-term memory, and they either fade away or move to long-term memory. Recall is an essential part of the listening process, as it helps us assess listening abilities and effectiveness.
4. Evaluating: During evaluation, we make judgments about the credibility, completeness, and value of the message. Credibility involves assessing how much we believe and trust the speaker's statements. Completeness refers to understanding the entire message and looking for underlying meanings. Value judgment entails evaluating the message's desirability or undesirability.
5. Responding: Responding involves sending verbal and nonverbal signals that demonstrate attentiveness and understanding. Back-channel prompts, such as "uh-huh" or nodding, are positive feedback indicators that show active listening. Conversely, negative signals may unintentionally or intentionally indicate a lack of attentiveness. Paraphrasing and asking clarifying questions are also responsive behaviors that show understanding and encourage further conversation.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Undivided Attention:

Undivided attention combines positive visible and cognitive listening practices. It helps overcome environmental, physical, cognitive, and personal barriers to effective listening. To be an active listener, one must make conscious decisions and take action to create ideal listening conditions. Physical distractions can be managed by changing locations or adjusting lighting, temperature, or furniture. Whenever possible, avoid engaging in significant listening activities during distracting mental or physiological noise. Effective listeners maintain focus and refocus when attention wavers.

Eye contact is often seen as a key indicator of undivided attention, and speakers typically interpret eye contact as a sign of engagement. However, before assuming the lack of eye contact indicates inattention, consider cultural differences, the speaker's thought process, or other reasons for the behavior. Another way to demonstrate undivided attention is to reference the speaker's previous statements. It follows the norms of politeness to acknowledge a previous statement or connect it to the speaker's current thought.

Summarizing what someone said to ensure comprehension or segueing to validate the previous speaker's message aids in maintaining conversational flow. Asking challenging questions is another way to show active listening and keep the conversation going as it encourages the speaker to share more. Questions that seek clarification, not just elaboration, are especially useful. Complex information should be presented at a slower speaking rate than natural speech to help the audience better process the information. Nonverbal feedback, such as nodding, can be beneficial to the speaker, indicating that the listener is attentive and understanding. However, if the speaker fails to interpret nonverbal cues, it might be necessary to follow up with verbal communication, using summaries and clarifying questions.

Undivided attention also involves being enthusiastic and engaged without interrupting the conversation. Active listeners know when to maintain their role as listeners and avoid steering the conversation. Taking notes can also demonstrate active listening, as it helps translate information into our mental framework for better understanding and assimilation.

Compassionate Listening:

Compassionate listening requires refraining from judgment and focusing on fully understanding the speaker. Paraphrasing is crucial in compassionate listening as it allows us to understand the message from the speaker's perspective. Expressing the speaker's thoughts in our words helps us grasp their emotions during communication. Compassionate listening goes beyond merely repeating verbal messages; it also involves reflecting the speaker's nonverbal cues. Adopting a similar stance and tone as the speaker can establish rapport and empathy, especially in professional settings.

Summarizing and addressing are effective techniques in compassionate listening, enabling a response without dominating the conversation. Open-ended questions serve as "verbal door openers," inviting the speaker to share more while actively listening, conveying that their words are being heard. Providing unsolicited advice should be avoided, and any feelings or emotions expressed by the speaker should be acknowledged both verbally and nonverbally.

© Amity University Online

Notes

Listening in Professional Settings:

Active participation and complete focus are crucial in organizational communication. Leaders can enhance their empathetic listening skills to create a positive communication environment and foster participation and motivation among employees. Engaging in active listening within the organization promotes unity and improves the overall communication atmosphere.

3.2.3 Barriers to Listening

The ability to process information beyond one thing at a time offers both advantages and disadvantages in effective listening. However, without understanding how our cognitive limitations and personal tendencies influence our listening, we may encounter more obstacles than benefits.

Comparison between Speech and Thought Rate:

The difference between the rate of speech and thought creates a barrier to effective listening. While people speak at a pace of 125 to 175 words per minute, our minds can process between 400 and 800 words per minute. This gap allows us to side-process various thoughts, which can distract us from the main message. However, it also enables us to use our additional cognitive capacity to reinforce the essential message. Personal barriers, such as narcissism and lack of motivation, often interfere with our ability to focus on others' messages. Selective attention leads us to filter out messages that we do not find personally relevant.

Lack of Listening Preparation:

An overall lack of listening preparation is another obstacle to effective listening. Many individuals have not received formal instruction in listening skills. While some believe listening skills develop over time, proficient listening requires deliberate effort and practice. Unfortunately, our individualistic culture values speaking more than listening, which contributes to the lack of emphasis on listening education.

Negative Messages or Speakers:

Poorly constructed messages or distracting speaker delivery can hinder effective listening. Information overload can overwhelm listeners, making it challenging to process the message effectively. Skilled speakers can help mitigate this by presenting information in a listener-friendly manner, using redundancy and providing clear examples. However, listening becomes difficult when a speaker presents too much information, leading to confusion.

Bias:

Bias in listening can lead to inflexible viewpoints, as we may attempt to protect our beliefs and resist being persuaded by alternative ideas. Biased listening can result from pre-judging individuals based on their identity or opinions, leading to inactive and ethically compromised listening.

Bad Listening Practices:

Several bad listening practices can hinder effective communication, including

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

interruption, mutilated listening, eavesdropping, aggressive listening, narcissistic listening, and pseudo-listening. Interruption can disrupt the natural flow of conversation and indicate poor listening if it stems from inattentiveness. Mutilated listening involves inaccurate interpretation or reattribution of messages, distorting their meaning. Eavesdropping is the secretive act of intentionally listening to a conversation without the speaker's knowledge, violating their privacy. Aggressive listening involves attacking what a speaker says, often due to built-up frustration in a relationship. Narcissistic listening revolves around making the conversation about the listener and diverting attention from the speaker. Pseudo-listening entails pretending to listen while not fully engaging in the listening process.

In conclusion, understanding and addressing these barriers can help enhance our listening skills and lead to more effective communication and understanding in various interpersonal and professional settings.

3.2.4 Effective Listening Strategies

Effective listening strategies can be categorized into top-down and bottom-up approaches based on how the listener processes information.

Top-Down Strategies:

1. Listening to the main idea: Utilize background knowledge and context to grasp the central message.
2. Anticipating: Predict what will come next based on the topic, context, and language cues.
3. Drawing conclusions: Infer information and make logical deductions from the speaker's message.
4. Summarizing: Condense and reiterate the main points to reinforce understanding.

Bottom-Up Strategies:

1. Listening to minutest detail: Focus on the specific sounds, words, and grammar to derive meaning.
2. Recognizing cognates: Identify familiar words or phrases in the language to aid comprehension.
3. Perceiving word-order pattern: Observe sentence structure to interpret the intended meaning.

Modes of Listening:

1. Active or Reflective Listening: Demonstrating interest and understanding of the speaker by actively engaging and confirming comprehension.
2. Passive Listening: Listening with interest but without actively confirming understanding.
3. Combative Listening: Listening to promote one's own perspective rather than understanding the other person's view.
4. Appreciative Listening: Seeking opportunities to appreciate and applaud the other person's statements.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

5. Mindful Listening: Listening attentively and carefully, showing genuine attention.
6. Empathetic Listening: Understanding the speaker's view by putting oneself in their position.
7. Judgmental Listening: Listening to pass judgments or criticize the speaker's statements.
8. Reflective Listening: Paraphrasing and reflecting back on the speaker's message for confirmation.
9. Total Listening: Paying full attention to find deeper meanings in the speaker's words.

Types of Listening

1	Active listening	A listening mode which demonstrates attention and understanding of the speaker
2	Appreciative Listening	Searching for approaches to acknowledge and welcome the other individual through what they state. Looking for chance to applaud.
3	Mindful Listening	Listening clearly and cautiously, indicating consideration.
4	Biased Listening	Listening through the channel of individual predisposition.
5	Causal Listening	Listening without clear demonstration of consideration. Real consideration may differ a great deal.
6	Comprehension Listening	Tuning in to comprehend. Looking for importance.
7	Critical Listening	Condemn what the speaker or others are saying
8	Deep Listening	Trying to comprehend with the speaker & the character. Hold genuine listening
9	Discriminative Listening	Listening for some details, but nothing else. For e.g., Child crying
10	Empathetic Listening	Showcasing empathy, understanding the speakers view, by putting oneself into the position of the speaker
11	Evaluative Listening	Order to evaluate, critical judgment of what the speaker is saying
12	Inactive Listening	Pretentious and doing acting of listening
13	Judgmental Listening	Listening to pass judgments, citizen the speaker
14	Partial Listening	In sync with dreaming and thinking something else, also part of the listening process
15	Reflective Listening	Reflect back on the speaker's view
16	Relationship Listening	To listen in an order to create a new relation or nurture present ones
17	Sympathetic Listening	Listening with wishing only well for the speaker
18	Therapeutic Listening	With empathy, trying to understand what another person is trying to Communicate
19	Total Listening	Paying total attention and to find the deeper meaning on what the speaker wanted to say

Importance of Listening Skill:

Having effective listening skills can lead to better task understanding, enhanced relationships, improved teamwork, conflict resolution, and efficient problem-solving.

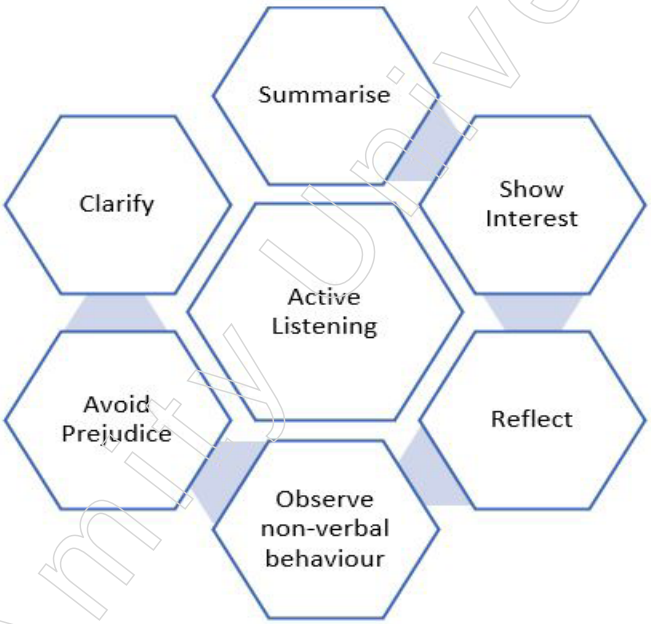
(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Effective Listening Strategies:

1. Face the speaker and maintain eye contact to display active engagement.
2. Minimize distractions and request others to do the same.
3. Provide appropriate responses to show understanding, such as nodding, murmuring, or asking relevant questions.
4. Focus solely on the speaker's message without thinking about your response in advance.
5. Let go of internal distractions and continuously refocus on the speaker's words.
6. Approach the conversation with an open mind and avoid making assumptions.
7. Refrain from sharing personal experiences unless asked for advice.
8. If the speaker has a complaint, listen until they finish before defending yourself.
9. Engage with the speaker by asking clarifying questions but avoid interrupting their train of thought.
10. After asking questions, summarize their main points to ensure accurate understanding.

By implementing these strategies, individuals can improve their listening skills and foster better communication and understanding in various personal and professional interactions.



3.2.5 Non-verbal Communication: Part 1

Nonverbal communication involves conveying messages without using words and includes gestures, facial expressions, tone of voice, timing, posture, and spatial positioning during communication. While nonverbal cues can support or hinder message clarity, they do not always reveal a person's true thoughts, and sometimes they even mask them.

© Amity University Online

Notes

Deciphering nonverbal cues can be quite intricate, as it encompasses the entire body, its movements, the spatial relationships, timing, and what remains unspoken and how it is conveyed. For example, facial expressions alone can be misleading without considering other accompanying cues like jaw position or raised eyebrows, which may indicate interest or a potential threat.

Understanding nonverbal communication requires careful study and observation since different movements and expressions blend seamlessly, making it challenging to interpret individual elements accurately. Even identifying emotions behind facial expressions can be difficult, as people may convey various emotions with similar facial movements.

In summary, nonverbal communication is a multifaceted aspect of human interaction that warrants thorough exploration and attention to grasp its intricacies and avoid misinterpretations.

https://stock.adobe.com/search?k=multiple+face+expression&asset_id=165055172

Nonverbal communication lacks the flexibility of written communication, where revisions, explanations, or retractions are possible. Once a nonverbal message is conveyed, it remains intact without the chance for corrections. While oral communication allows for immediate clarifications or rephrasing, the original message and its impact cannot be erased. Nonverbal cues are even more challenging to interpret as they are intricate and intertwined with other verbal and nonverbal acts, making it difficult to isolate a single element.

The Principal of Non-verbal Communication:

Nonverbal communication has a unique history and developmental role compared to verbal communication. It is rooted in biological factors, while verbal communication is influenced by social factors. Certain nonverbal elements hold universal significance across cultures, unlike verbal communication systems. Nonverbal communication emerged earlier and played a crucial role in human survival, aiding in the development of verbal communication. Nonverbal signals are processed by an older part of the brain, making them more instinctive and automatic.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Nonverbal Communication Is More Involuntary than Verbal:

Spontaneous verbal communication occurs occasionally, but nonverbal cues are more automatic and subconscious. Controlling nonverbal signals is challenging, and attempts to feign certain emotions are often noticeable. Nonverbal communication always conveys some meaning to others, even when verbal messages are deliberately withheld. In this sense, nonverbal communication is powerful and difficult to manipulate.

Functions of Nonverbal Communication:

Nonverbal communication serves various functions, including reinforcing, substituting, or negating verbal messages. It can also regulate conversational flow, preventing interruptions or awkward silences. Additionally, nonverbal cues play a significant role in forming and influencing relationships and expressing one's identity.

Gesture Cluster:

Nonverbal communication encompasses several methods, including paralinguistics (voice quality), proxemics (use of space), haptics (use of touch), chronemics (use of time), physical appearance (features and attire), and kinesics (body posture and movement).

Paralinguistic:

Paralinguistics involves the voice's role in nonverbal communication, including tone, pitch, quality, and other vocal characteristics. These aspects influence the listener's interpretation of the message and can convey emotions and emphasis beyond the words themselves. Paralinguistic variations are easily understood by the audience and may affect sentence structure and regional origins. Proper use of voice tone and breathing can enhance paralinguistic behavior.

Proxemics:

Proxemics is the study of spatial distances people naturally maintain in various social and interpersonal situations. Edward T. Hall coined the term proxemics in the 1960s. People establish relationships based on the distances they keep from others, such as close space for intimate relationships and open space for public speaking. Intimacy zones vary across cultures, with some societies maintaining closer distances than others. Socially conditioned proximity influences interpersonal interactions and mutual trust.

3.2.6 Non-verbal Communication: Part 2

Functions of Nonverbal Communication

Nonverbal communication plays a crucial role in conveying meaning through the reinforcement, substitution, or negation of verbal communication. Additionally, it serves as a means to influence others and regulate the flow of conversation. Equally significant are the ways in which nonverbal communication operates as a fundamental component of social interaction and the expression of one's identity.

Nonverbal Communication Conveys Meaning

Nonverbal correspondence passes on significance by fortifying, filling in

© Amity University Online

Notes

for, or negating verbal correspondence. As we've just learned, verbal and nonverbal correspondence are two pieces of a similar framework that regularly work next to each other, helping us produce meaning. As far as fortifying verbal correspondence, motions can help portray a space or shape that someone else is new to in manners that words alone can't. Signals additionally strengthen fundamental importance—for instance, highlighting the entryway when you advise somebody to leave. Outward appearances strengthen the passionate states we pass on through verbal correspondence. For instance, grinning while at the same time recounting to an entertaining story better passes on your feelings (Hargie, 2011). Vocal variety can assist us with stressing a specific piece of a message, which strengthens a word or sentence's importance. For instance, saying "Did you have a good end of the week?" passes on an unexpected importance in comparison to "Did you have a good end of the week?"

Nonverbal correspondence can fill in for verbal correspondence in an assortment of ways. Nonverbal correspondence can pass on much importance when verbal correspondence isn't compelling in light of language boundaries. Language boundaries are available when an individual hasn't yet figured out how to talk or loses the capacity to talk. For instance, infants who have not yet evolved language abilities make outward appearances, at a couple of months old, that are like those of grown-ups and along these lines can produce meaning (Oster, Hegley, and Nagel, 1992). Individuals who have created language abilities yet can't utilise them since they have incidentally or for all time lost them or in light of the fact that they are utilising contrary language codes, as in some culturally diverse experiences, can at present impart nonverbally. In spite of the fact that it's consistently a smart thought to gain proficiency with a portion of the nearby language when you travel, motions, for example, pointing or showing the size or state of something may do the trick in fundamental communications.

Nonverbal correspondence is additionally valuable in a calm circumstance where verbal correspondence would be upsetting; for instance, you may utilise a motion to motion toward a companion that you're prepared to leave the library. Swarmed or boisterous spots can likewise block verbal correspondence and lead individuals to depend more on nonverbal messages. Getting a worker or barkeep's consideration with a hand signal is certainly more courteous than hollering, "Hello you!" Finally, there are simply times when we know it's better not to state something resoundingly. On the off chance that you need to call attention to an individual's unordinary outfit or sign to a companion that you think their date is a washout, you're presumably bound to do that nonverbally.

Last, nonverbal correspondence can pass on significance by negating verbal correspondence. As we learned before, we regularly see nonverbal correspondence to be sounder than verbal correspondence. This is particularly evident when we get blended messages, or messages in which verbal and nonverbal signs repudiate one another. For instance, an individual may state, "You can't do anything right!" in a mean tone however line that up with a wink, which could demonstrate the individual is prodding or kidding. Blended messages lead to vulnerability and disarray with respect to beneficiaries, which drives us to search for more data to attempt to figure out which message is more valid. In the event that we can't resolve the inconsistency, we are probably going to respond adversely and conceivably pull back from the cooperation (Hargie, 2011). Constant blended messages can prompt social trouble and hurt an individual's validity in proficient settings.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

Nonverbal Communication Regulates Conversational Flow

Conversational interaction can be likened to a dance, wherein individuals must make coordinated moves and take turns without intruding on one another. Nonverbal communication plays a crucial role in regulating our conversations, preventing constant interruptions or awkward silences during speaker transitions. Vocal pitch, a component of speech, aids in conveying our conversational intentions to others. A rising pitch often signifies a question, while a falling pitch indicates the conclusion of a thought or a conversational turn. Moreover, a declining pitch can be employed to indicate closure, particularly beneficial when concluding a speech to prompt applause and avoid uncomfortable silence that speakers tend to fill with phrases like “That’s it” or “Thank you.” Additionally, we signify the conclusion of our turn by ceasing hand gestures and shifting our gaze towards the individual we anticipate will speak next (Hargie, 2011). Conversely, we can retain control of the conversation through nonverbal cues, even when uncertain about our forthcoming statement. Repetition of a hand gesture or employing verbal fillers enables us to extend our turn, despite not currently engaging in verbal communication.

Nonverbal Communication Affects Relationships

In order to establish meaningful connections with others, it is essential to possess the ability to encode and decode nonverbal communication. The impact of the nonverbal messages we transmit and receive on our relationships can be both positive and negative, either fostering unity or driving people apart. Numerous instances, including tie signs, immediacy behaviours, and displays of emotion, exemplify the profound influence of nonverbal communication on our interpersonal connections.

Tie signs, which are nonverbal cues indicating intimacy and signaling the bond between individuals, take various forms. They may involve symbolic objects like wedding rings or tattoos that represent a person or the relationship itself. Furthermore, tie signs can manifest through actions such as sharing a drinking glass or through tactile behaviours like holding hands (Afifi & Johnson, 2005). Touch behaviours, specifically, have been extensively examined as tie signs and can convey significant information about a relationship based on factors like the location of the touch, its duration, and the intensity involved. For instance, kisses and hugs are considered tie signs; however, a kiss on the cheek carries a different meaning than one on the mouth, and a full embrace differs from a half embrace. If you have an inclination towards observing people’s behaviour, it is worth noting the various tie signs they employ and the implications they might hold for their relationships

According to Andersen and Andersen (2005), immediacy behaviours have been Recognised as a crucial aspect of nonverbal communication that facilitates social cohesion. These behaviours, which encompass both verbal and nonverbal cues such as smiling, nodding, maintaining eye contact, and occasionally engaging in appropriate physical contact, aim to reduce the perceived physical and psychological distance between individuals (Comadena, Hunt, & Simonds, 2007). The use of immediacy behaviours is an effective strategy for establishing rapport, fostering a friendly and positive connection between people. Skilled practitioners of nonverbal communication are more likely to create rapport with others by employing attention-grabbing expressiveness, offering warm initial greetings, and demonstrating the ability to empathise and synchronize with others (Riggio, 1992). Developing these skills is crucial for initiating and sustaining relationships.

©Amity University Online

Notes

While verbal communication primarily serves problem-solving and the conveyance of detailed instructions, nonverbal communication is primarily employed to express emotions. This can be attributed to the historical precedence of nonverbal communication, predating verbal communication and serving as the primary means through which emotions such as anger, fear, and love were expressed throughout human history (Andersen, 1999). Touch and facial expressions are the two main avenues through which emotions are conveyed nonverbally. Love, in particular, is an emotion that is primarily expressed through nonverbal means and forms the foundation of our close relationships. Although there is no singular facial expression exclusively associated with love, it is often expressed through extended eye contact, close proximity, increased physical touch, and increased time spent together, among other indicators. Given that many individuals possess a limited emotional vocabulary, nonverbal expressions of emotions assume a central role in our relationships.

Nonverbal Communication Expresses Our Identities

Nonverbal communication communicates what our identity is. Our characters (the gatherings to which we have a place, our societies, our leisure activities and interests, and so forth.) are passed on nonverbally through the manner in which we set up our living and working spaces, the garments we wear, the manner in which we convey ourselves, and the accents and tones of our voices. Our physical bodies give others impressions about what our identity is, and a portion of these highlights are more heavily influenced by us than others. Tallness, for instance, has been appeared to impact how individuals are dealt with and seen in different settings. Our degree of engaging quality additionally impacts our personalities and how individuals see us. Despite the fact that we can incidentally adjust our tallness or looks—for instance, with changed shoes or diverse shading contact focal points—we can just for all time modify these highlights utilising more obtrusive and expensive estimates, for example, corrective medical procedure.

We have more authority over some different parts of nonverbal correspondence as far as how we impart our characters. For instance, the manner in which we help and present ourselves through stance, eye-to-eye connection, and manner of speaking can be adjusted to introduce us as warm or far off contingent upon the specific circumstance. Beside our physical body, antiquities, which are the items and assets that encompass us, additionally convey our characters. Instances of antiquities incorporate our garments, gems, and space improvements. In all the past models, verifiable standards or unequivocal guidelines can influence how we nonverbally present ourselves. For instance, in a specific working environment it might be a standard (verifiable) for individuals in the board positions to dress coolly, or it might be a standard (unequivocal) that various degrees of representatives wear various regalia or follow specific clothing regulations. We can likewise utilise nonverbal correspondence to communicate personality qualities that don't coordinate with who we really think we are. Through changes to nonverbal signs, a skilled individual can attempt to seem vulnerable, a liable individual can attempt to seem honest, or a clueless individual can attempt to seem dependable.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

3.2.7 Non-verbal Communication: Part 3

Types of Nonverbal Communication

Nonverbal communication comprises of different methods, paralinguistic (discourse quality), proxemics (utilisation of room), haptics (utilisation of touch), chronemics (utilisation of time), physical appearance (highlights and apparel), and kinesics (body act and development).

Paralinguistic-

The voice plays a significant role in nonverbal communication, not only in conveying a message but also in complementing it effectively. The tone, pitch, and quality of the speaker's voice influence the listener's interpretation of the message. While written words often have a fixed meaning on paper, their spoken delivery can alter their significance. Paralinguistics refers to the aspects of voice that convey meaning beyond the words themselves. These include emphasis, volume, pitch, intonation, and modulation, which are also influenced by a person's regional background or socioeconomic status (Eunson 2008:262).

Paralinguistics also encompass other vocal characteristics like laughter and silence. These paralinguistic variations communicate meaning that can be easily understood by the audience. It is important to note that the speaker's delivery style may contradict the content of the message. Paralinguistics also encompass speech errors, pauses, and fillers such as "uh," "um," or "so." These disruptions are often caused by stress and can indicate the speaker's emotional state (for instance, public speaking is one of the most common fears and causes of anxiety). While repetitions and hesitations are likely caused by anxiety, fillers are used to gain extra time while signaling that the speech will continue. Ideally, professional interpreters should avoid adopting the speaker's fillers and maintain a clear verbal channel. Paralinguistics may also affect sentence structure, as rising intonation can turn a statement into a question. Moreover, expressions can reveal a person's regional origin. The proper use of voice tone, speed, rhythm, and breathing can enhance paralinguistic behaviour. James Borg suggests some helpful breathing techniques: shallow and short breaths increase anxiety and unease (which are noticeable), whereas deep abdominal breaths make the voice sound more relaxed and confident. Good posture is also important because slouching and shoulder shrugging are detrimental to the breathing pattern and overall communication.

Proxemics

Merriam-Webster's word reference characterises proxemics as "the investigation of the nature, degree, and impact of the spatial detachment people normally keep up (as in different social and relational circumstances) and of how this detachment identifies with ecological and social factors." The worth of space and spatial qualities in correspondence was uncovered with the examination of American social anthropologist Edward T. Corridor, among others. In mid 1960s, he instituted the term proxemics (from Latin proximities - region). In his essential work regarding the matter – The Hidden Dimension distributed in 1966 he depicted proxemics conduct of man in four zones: close space (around 50 cm), individual space (around 1 m), social space (1 to 2 m), and open space (in excess of 2 m). These zones, or relative separations between individuals, depict the sum of space an individual would need to need to feel good comparable to others. Zones build up connections between individuals, which is shown by the separation they remain from each other, for example the personal space is held distinctly for the dearest companions, accomplices, relatives; individual space is saved for associations with companions, close collaborators, and great associates; socials space is the separation between outsiders, new colleagues, and such; open space is utilised for open talking. Individuals think about close space as their domain so an interruption into somebody's nearest space (for example tapping on the back, embracing) will in all probability cause negative feeling.

© Amity University Online

Notes

The closer our relationship to an individual is, the closer that individual will permit us to move toward them. Closeness zones appear to be socially molded. Northern American and European individuals' separation themselves more than some Asian societies familiar with overpopulation, for instance Japan. Allan Pease noticed that at a gathering in the USA Americans remained around 46 to 122 cm separated when conversing with each other, while the Japanese had a lot shorter cozy space of around 25 cm. On account of the socially molded contrast in zones, the Americans separated themselves and the Japanese moved nearer, prompting common doubt.

Acoustic Features

Types of Nonverbal Communication:

1. Paralinguistic:

   The voice plays a crucial role in nonverbal communication, not just in conveying a message but also in complementing it effectively. Paralinguistics refers to the aspects of voice that convey meaning beyond the words themselves. These include tone, pitch, quality, emphasis, volume, intonation, and modulation. Regional background or socioeconomic status can also influence these vocal characteristics. Paralinguistic variations, such as laughter and silence, communicate meaning that is easily understood by the audience. The speaker's delivery style may sometimes contradict the content of the message. Additionally, speech errors, pauses, and fillers like "uh," "um," or "so" can indicate the speaker's emotional state or stress. Proper use of voice tone, speed, rhythm, and breathing can enhance paralinguistic behavior.

2. Proxemics:

   Proxemics refers to the study of the nature, degree, and impact of the spatial distance people typically maintain in different social and relational situations. It was introduced by American social anthropologist Edward T. Hall in the mid-1960s. Hall described proxemic behavior in four zones: close space (around 50 cm), personal space (around 1 m), social space (1 to 2 m), and public space (more than 2 m). These zones establish relationships between individuals based on the distance they maintain from each other. Close space is reserved for close relationships like family and partners, personal space for interactions with friends and close colleagues, social space for interactions with strangers and new acquaintances, and public space for open speaking. The proximity we maintain with others varies depending on the level of intimacy in the relationship. Proxemics can be socially conditioned, leading to different norms in different cultures. For example, people in Northern America and Europe tend to keep greater distances compared to some Asian cultures, like

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Japan, where closer proximity is common. These differences in proxemics can lead to mutual suspicion or comfort between individuals.

3. Acoustic Features:

Acoustic features are the landmarks of word pronunciation, encompassing vowel sounds, consonant sounds, the length and emphasis of individual sounds, and other characteristics. These features result from individual articulation and can vary slightly among speakers. Different acoustic features in word pronunciation can create regional accents, distinctions between similar words, and shades of meaning. For instance, English has many homonyms, words that sound the same but have different meanings, like 'which' and 'which.' Subtle differences in pronunciation or major differences in emphasis can indicate distinctions between these words. Regional accents may also arise due to variations in acoustic features, making pronunciation unique to specific geographical areas.

Conclusion:

Nonverbal communication plays a significant role in both everyday interactions and professional translator associations. Unlike verbal communication, it lacks fixed meaning and encompasses various aspects such as speech patterns, attire, time perception, spatial orientation, and body posture.

Kinesics, the study of body movement, is crucial in both simultaneous and consecutive interpreting. In simultaneous interpreting, kinesics may have a smaller role as interpreters are not visible to the audience, but it still affects their physiology, mood, and stress levels. On the other hand, in consecutive interpreting, kinesics plays a more prominent role as interpreters take on the role of speakers, and their body movements can convey meaning similar to public speakers. Their body position and gestures can signal internal emotions like confidence, fear, or anxiety, not only conveying the verbal message but also their own attitudes and feelings.

Understanding kinesics is valuable for interpreters to better grasp the speaker's intent, influence their body physiology, and enhance the significance of their own movements. While it may be more relevant in consecutive interpreting, kinesics awareness improves interpreters' communication skills overall. Further research is needed to explore the connection between interpreters' nonverbal abilities and the quality of their delivery. As communication is a challenging and vital aspect of interpretation, professionals continuously strive to improve their skills to make their messages clearer, intentions stronger, and impact more profound. Sometimes, words can create barriers, and letting our bodies speak can be the key to genuine connection.

Summary:

- Communication involves passing information and understanding between individuals through various means.
- Listening is a process that includes receiving, interpreting, evaluating, and responding to both verbal and nonverbal messages.
- Nonverbal communication reinforces, substitutes, or negates verbal communication to convey meaning.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- Our physical bodies convey impressions about our identity, influenced by certain features more than others.
- Paralinguistics refers to voice aspects beyond words that convey meaning.
- Proxemics involves body language and the spatial distance we create in nonverbal communication.
- Acoustic features result from individual articulation and can vary between users.
- Kinesics focuses on significant body movements and how they are delivered.

Glossary:

- Communication: The process of exchanging information, ideas, thoughts, or feelings between individuals through various mediums.
- Verbal Communication: The use of spoken or written words to convey information or express thoughts and feelings.
- Nonverbal Communication: The transmission of messages through gestures, body language, facial expressions, and other visual cues.
- Written Communication: The use of written words, such as letters, emails, memos, or reports, to communicate and share information.
- Sender: The person who initiates and encodes a message to be conveyed to the receiver.
- Message: The information, ideas, or thoughts that the sender intends to communicate to the receiver.
- Encoding: The process of converting thoughts, ideas, or feelings into a format that can be transmitted to the receiver.
- Channel: The medium or means through which the encoded message is transmitted, such as face-to-face conversation, phone call, email, etc.
- Receiver: The person or audience who receives and decodes the message sent by the sender.
- Decoding: The process by which the receiver interprets and understands the message received from the sender.
- Feedback: The response or reaction provided by the receiver to the sender, indicating the understanding or comprehension of the message.
- Listening: The process of actively receiving, interpreting, and comprehending spoken or written messages from others.

Check Your Understanding:

1. Which of the following is an example of non-verbal communication?
   a) Sending an email
   b) Giving a presentation
   c) Shaking hands
   d) Making a phone call

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Answer: c) Shaking hands

2. The process of communication involves the following stages, except:
   a) Encoding
   b) Decoding
   c) Feedback
   d) Translating

   Answer: d) Translating

3. Which of the following is NOT a type of communication?
   a) Verbal communication
   b) Written communication
   c) Non-verbal communication
   d) Intuitive communication

   Answer: d) Intuitive communication

4. Communication channels refer to:
   a) The physical distance between the sender and receiver
   b) The different ways information can be transmitted
   c) The level of noise in the communication environment
   d) The emotional tone of the message

   Answer: b) The different ways information can be transmitted

5. Which of the following is a barrier to effective communication?
   a) Active listening
   b) Using clear and concise language
   c) Cultural differences
   d) Seeking feedback

   Answer: c) Cultural differences

6. Strategies to overcome communication barriers include:
   a) Using jargon and technical terms
   b) Avoiding eye contact
   c) Active listening
   d) Interrupting the speaker

   Answer: c) Active listening

7. Which of the following is an example of verbal communication?
   a) Nodding your head
   b) Text messaging
   c) Writing a letter

© Amity University Online

Notes

d) Facial expressions

Answer: c) Writing a letter

8. Which of the following is NOT a non-verbal cue?

a) Body language

b) Tone of voice

c) Written words

d) Facial expressions

Answer: c) Written words

9. Listening is an important part of communication because:

a) It allows the receiver to understand the message accurately

b) It helps the sender encode the message effectively

c) It speeds up the communication process

d) It ensures the message is transmitted through the right channel

Answer: a) It allows the receiver to understand the message accurately

10. Which of the following is a form of written communication?

a) Giving a speech

b) Making a phone call

c) Sending a memo

d) Holding a meeting

Answer: c) Sending a memo

11. What is one of the barriers to effective listening?

a) Maintaining eye contact

b) Using active listening techniques

c) Prejudging the speaker or topic

d) Responding with empathy

Answer: c) Prejudging the speaker or topic

12. Which of the following strategies can help overcome barriers to effective listening?

a) Interrupting the speaker to ask questions

b) Focusing on your own thoughts and ideas

c) Avoiding distractions and giving your full attention

d) Multitasking while listening to the speaker

Answer: c) Avoiding distractions and giving your full attention

13. What is a common barrier to effective listening in a noisy environment?

a) Using active listening techniques

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

b) Focusing on non-verbal cues from the speaker

c) Tuning out distractions and background noise

d) Struggling to hear the speaker's words clearly

Answer: d) Struggling to hear the speaker's words clearly

14. Which strategy can help overcome barriers to listening caused by cultural differences?

a) Making assumptions about the speaker's background

b) Ignoring the speaker's non-verbal cues and gestures

c) Being open-minded and respectful of diverse perspectives

d) Using jargon and technical terms to communicate effectively

Answer: c) Being open-minded and respectful of diverse perspectives

15. When someone is speaking, it is important to:

a) Finish their sentences to show you understand

b) Think about what you're going to say next

c) Listen actively and give them your full attention

d) Interrupt them if they are taking too long

Answer: c) Listen actively and give them your full attention

16. Which of the following is an example of positive body language during a conversation?

a) Avoiding eye contact and looking at your phone

b) Fidgeting and constantly shifting your position

c) Facing the person directly and maintaining good posture

d) Checking your watch and yawning

Answer: c) Facing the person directly and maintaining good posture

17. The key to effective listening is:

a) Interrupting the speaker to offer your own opinions

b) Focusing on the speaker's body language rather than their words

c) Asking open-ended questions to gather more information

d) Assuming you already know what the speaker will say Answer: c) Asking open-ended questions to gather more information

18. Which of the following gestures may indicate defensiveness or resistance?

a) Smiling and nodding

b) Crossing your arms tightly across your chest

c) Leaning forward and maintaining eye contact

d) Tilting your head slightly to the side

Answer: b) Crossing your arms tightly across your chest

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

19. Which of the following is an example of a formal channel of communication?

    a) Face-to-face conversation

    b) Phone call

    c) Email

    d) Informal chat

    Answer: c) Email

20. Which channel of communication is most suitable for delivering confidential information?

    a) Public announcement

    b) Phone call

    c) Email

    d) Memorandum

    Answer: d) Memorandum

Exercise:

1. Define communication.

   Communication is the process of exchanging information, ideas, thoughts, or feelings between individuals through various mediums.

2. What are the different processes of communication?

   The different processes of communication include encoding (converting thoughts into a message), transmitting the message through a chosen channel, receiving the message, and decoding (interpreting and understanding the message).

3. Explain different channels of communication.

   Communication channels refer to the various means through which information can be transmitted, such as face-to-face conversations, phone calls, emails, memos, letters, public announcements, etc.

4. What is the listening process? What are the different modes of listening?

   The listening process involves actively receiving, interpreting, comprehending, and responding to spoken or written messages. Different modes of listening include informational listening (to gather information), critical listening (to evaluate and analyze), empathetic listening (to understand emotions and feelings), and appreciative listening (to enjoy and appreciate).

5. Explain different barriers to listening. How do they affect the communication process?

   Barriers to listening include external factors like noise, distractions, and the physical environment, as well as internal factors like preconceived notions, personal biases, and lack of interest. These barriers hinder effective communication by impeding the accurate reception and understanding of the message.

6. Explain some effective listening strategies?

   Effective listening strategies include giving full attention to the speaker, avoiding

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

distractions, maintaining eye contact, using active listening techniques (e.g., paraphrasing, asking questions), being open-minded, and seeking clarification when necessary.

7. What is non-verbal communication? How is it different from verbal communication?

   Non-verbal communication involves the transmission of messages through gestures, body language, facial expressions, tone of voice, and other visual cues, without the use of spoken or written words. It differs from verbal communication, which relies on spoken or written language to convey information or express thoughts and feelings. Non-verbal communication often complements and reinforces verbal communication, providing additional context and meaning to the message.

Learning Activities

1. Describe the stages of communication and discuss why each stage is important in maintaining effective communication within a team or organization.
2. Explain the importance of active listening in effective communication. What are some strategies that can be employed to enhance active listening skills in a professional environment?
3. Non-verbal communication plays a crucial role in conveying messages. Discuss the different types of non-verbal communication cues and their significance in both face-to-face and virtual communication.
4. What are some common barriers to effective communication in an industrial context? How can these barriers be identified and overcome to ensure clear and concise communication?

Further Readings and Bibliography

1. Business Communication Today Courtland L. Bovée, C. Allen Paul and John V. Thill. Pearson. 2021.
2. Business Communication: https://www.icsi.edu/media/webmodules/CSEET/BUSINESS_COMMUNICATION.pdf

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

Module - 4: Effective Presentation

Learning Objectives:

At the end of this topic, you will be able to:

- Learn to present yourself effectively and efficiently in official meetings.
- Understand the importance of preparation for a meeting and the qualities to be skillful presenter.
- Understand the ways to write for the web and netiquette.
- Practice the ways to write official emails and memos.

Introduction

Effective presentation skills are crucial in today's professional world. Whether you are delivering a sales pitch, presenting a project to your team, or speaking at a conference, your ability to convey information and engage your audience plays a significant role in the success of your message. We will explore the various aspects of an effective presentation and provide tips to help you deliver impactful and memorable presentations.

4.1 Introduction to Effective Presentation

4.1.1 Pre-Presentation Jitters

Pre-Presentation Jitters: How to Calm Your Nerves Step by Step

It's normal to feel nervous before a presentation. Your stomach may churn, your palms may get sweaty, and your mind might go blank about your opening lines. But how can you handle the fear of facing an audience and overcome the anxiety that comes with public speaking?

For many people, public speaking is a significant fear, also known as "gloss phobia." However, giving presentations is a common requirement, whether it's in front of a large audience or just among colleagues. To excel in these situations, it's essential to develop strategies and techniques to manage your nerves and deliver a powerful and engaging presentation.

First and foremost, acknowledge that feeling nervous before a presentation is normal and natural. Even experienced speakers can feel a bit anxious. The key is not to eliminate anxiety entirely but to use it to your advantage. The adrenaline pumping through your body can be harnessed positively, enabling you to communicate passionately, convincingly, and energetically. The goal is to reduce the level of anxiety to allow you to focus on connecting with your audience and meeting their needs rather than being overly concerned about your own feelings.

To manage your nervousness effectively, here are six key tips to remember:

1. Embrace uncertainty: Recognise that presenting is not an innate activity for most people, and some level of uncertainty is normal. Embrace this uncertainty and view it as an opportunity to grow and improve.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

2. Focus on your audience: Shift your attention from yourself and your nervousness to your audience and their needs. Concentrate on delivering value and engaging with them.
3. Prepare thoroughly: Confidence comes from being well-prepared. Rehearse your presentation multiple times to ensure you are familiar with your content.
4. Practice relaxation techniques: Incorporate relaxation techniques into your pre-presentation routine, such as deep breathing, visualisation, or mindfulness exercises.
5. Visualise success: Imagine yourself delivering a successful presentation, captivating the audience, and receiving positive feedback.
6. Start with a positive mindset: Instead of dwelling on potential mistakes, approach the presentation with a positive mindset and a focus on growth and improvement.

By applying these strategies, you can control and manage your nervousness effectively, allowing you to channel your energy into delivering an impactful and confident presentation. Remember, it's normal to feel nervous, but with practice and the right mindset, you can conquer your fears and leave a lasting impression on your audience.

4.1.2 Preparation and Practice

Six Steps to Overcoming Presentation Nerves

1. Understand Your Audience

   To ease your nerves before a presentation, ensure that you have a clear understanding of your audience and what they expect from your presentation. Engage with representative individuals from the crowd beforehand to gather insights into their expectations. Share your presentation plan with a select group for feedback on potential improvements. Additionally, reach out to attendees in advance via email to learn about their anticipated expectations.

2. Master Your Material

   Thoroughly prepare and understand your presentation material to boost your confidence. While you don't need to be an expert, having a strong grasp of the subject matter is essential. Tailor your content to align with your audience's needs, selecting the most relevant points to deliver effectively. Incorporate occasional questions to encourage audience participation and make the session more engaging.

3. Structure Your Presentation

   Instead of memorising your entire presentation, create a well-structured outline with key phrases to trigger your memory during delivery. Have cue cards with essential points to maintain your flow and confidence. Using slides with key phrases as transitions can also be beneficial. The goal is to provide yourself with cues to stay on track and reduce uncertainty.

4. Practice Regularly

   Practice is key to increasing your comfort and confidence during the presentation. Familiarise yourself with the organisation and order of your content. Consider recording yourself to assess your performance and make necessary adjustments.

© Amity University Online

Notes

Practice in front of a smaller audience before significant speaking events to gain experience and refine your delivery.

5. Prepare for the Presentation

   Prior to the actual presentation, ensure you are well-prepared. Select comfortable and appropriate attire for the occasion. Arrive early to set up your equipment and anticipate potential issues. Have backups and contingencies in place for any unforeseen challenges. Plan responses to anticipated questions to address potential concerns.

6. Calm Your Nerves Internally

   Combat the physiological effects of anxiety by practicing deep breathing to ensure proper oxygen flow to your brain. Stay hydrated to prevent a dry mouth, which can lead to stumbling during the presentation. Visualise a positive scenario where the audience is engaged and receptive. Smile to relax and trigger positive chemicals in your body. Utilise visualisation techniques to imagine delivering a successful presentation.

   Bonus Tip: Speak more slowly than you would in a regular conversation, allowing longer pauses between sentences. This slower pace will not only calm you but also make your message clearer to the audience.

   Remember, nerves are natural, and you can use them to your advantage by channelling your energy positively. By following these steps and being well-prepared, you can conquer your presentation nerves and deliver an impressive and confident presentation that captivates your audience.

4.1.3 Delivering the Presentation

Mastering the art of delivering a compelling presentation is crucial for effective business communication. Whether your audience includes clients, colleagues, or stakeholders, the success of your presentation hinges on your ability to convey your message clearly and engage them effectively. Here are some valuable tips to help you achieve that:

1. Understand Your Audience: Tailor your message based on your audience's knowledge, interests, and expectations. Customising your content and delivery style will resonate better with them.
2. Plan and Structure Your Presentation: Create a logical flow for your presentation, starting with an attention-grabbing introduction, outlining main points, and concluding with a memorable closing. Utilise visual aids like slides or props to support your key messages and enhance comprehension.
3. Practice Diligently: Rehearse your presentation multiple times to become familiar with the content and ensure a smooth delivery. Pay attention to timing, gestures, and vocal variety. Consider recording yourself or presenting to a small group for feedback and improvement.
4. Engage Your Audience: Keep your presentation interactive and engaging to maintain their attention. Incorporate questions, anecdotes, or interactive elements to encourage participation. Use eye contact, body language, and facial expressions to connect with individuals in the room.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

5. Utilise Visual Aids Effectively: Visual aids, such as slides or videos, can enhance your message and convey complex information. Keep them simple, visually appealing, and aligned with your key points. Avoid overwhelming your audience with excessive text or cluttered visuals.
6. Speak Confidently and Clearly: Project confidence through your voice and body language. Speak clearly and at a moderate pace to ensure everyone can follow along. Utilise strategic pauses to emphasise important points and give the audience time to absorb information.
7. Be Mindful of Non-Verbal Communication: Pay attention to your body language throughout the presentation. Stand tall, maintain an open posture, and use natural gestures to enhance your message. Avoid distracting habits like fidgeting or excessive pacing.
8. Connect Emotionally: Incorporate storytelling techniques and real-life examples to create an emotional connection with your audience. Emotionally resonant presentations are more likely to be remembered and impactful.
9. Address Questions and Concerns: Be prepared to answer questions and address concerns from your audience. Anticipate potential queries and have well-thought-out responses. If you don't know the answer, be honest and offer to follow up later.
10. Conclude Strongly with a Call to Action: Summarise your main points and end with a clear call to action. Whether it's a request for further discussion, a decision, or action steps, make it explicit and compelling.

    Balancing preparation, confidence, and audience engagement is key to delivering an effective presentation that resonates with your business audience. By incorporating these tips, you can enhance your communication skills and leave a lasting impact on your listeners.

4.1.4 Qualities of a Skilful Presenter

Twenty-eight characteristics define remarkable presenters, who consistently strive to embody these traits. These characteristics exhibit contrasting qualities, and it is important to visualise each one in order to gain a better understanding of how to effectively demonstrate them.

1. Nonverbal Proficiency: Demonstrating clear communication through body language, such as movements, gestures, posture, and facial expressions, which often convey messages more powerfully than words. Conversely, avoid appearing unnatural.
2. Verbal Proficiency: Commanding language skills and utilising impactful words. The way you speak, including tone, expression, volume, pacing, pausing, and articulation, can captivate an audience. However, beware of sounding like a monotonous reader delivering a written speech, as it can be incredibly dull.
3. Enthusiastic: Radiating liveliness and excitement. Actively engage and energise your audience. Conversely, avoid coming across as lethargic.

© Amity University Online

Notes

4. Assertive: Displaying strength and confidence, striking a balance between aggression and passivity. Avoid being overly timid.
5. Perceptive: Possessing a keen ability to accurately assess situations or individuals and leverage them to your advantage. Avoid appearing unintelligent.
6. Optimistic: Evidently cheerful and positive.
7. Clear: Ensuring your message is easily understandable, leaving no room for doubt. Prioritise clarity by testing your message beforehand. Avoid being vague.
8. Authoritative: Being in control while encouraging audience participation. Avoid being withdrawn.
9. Self-assured: Projecting confidence and self-belief, an attractive quality. Avoid being uncertain.
10. Persuasive: Convincing and compelling. This should be self-evident. Avoid being unconvincing.
11. Dynamic: Engaging and stimulating. Make your audience feel involved; it is a one-way ticket to generating interest. Avoid being indecisive.
12. Effective: Efficient in achieving the desired outcome. Ultimately, this is the goal of your presentation. Ensure your audience receives what they expect and need. Avoid being ineffective or weak.
13. Energetic: Displaying vitality. Maintain a steady pace as you move around the room. Avoid being inactive.
14. Engaging: Attracting and holding interest. Another crucial quality is the ability to connect with audiences of all sizes. Avoid being unappealing.
15. Captivating: Holding undivided attention. Keep everyone's eyes on you instead of their smartphones. Avoid being boring, as it can be detrimental to any presentation."
16. Excited: indicating extraordinary and enthusiastic happiness. Inverse: discouraged.
17. Centred: giving specific consideration to the current theme. Keep on point; don't permit your crowd to take control. Inverse: unpredictable.
18. Imaginative: unique and innovative reasoning. Give your crowd more than what they anticipate. Inverse: worn out.
19. Proficient: savvy and very much educated. Realise an idea all around ok to disclose it to the unenlightened. Inverse: clueless.
20. Sensible: clear, stable thinking. What you present must bode well. Inverse: strange or unreasonable.
21. Critical: effectively recalled; worth recollecting. Ensure your crowd removes something with them. Inverse: forgettable.
22. Characteristic: smooth and cleaned. This take is a touch of concentrated practice. Inverse: self-still, small voice or off-kilter.
23. Composed: organised and in charge. Regard your crowd by setting aside the effort to satisfactorily plan. Inverse: scattered or wasteful.
24. Energetic: indicating solid sentiments. On the off chance that you are not energetic,

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

how might you anticipate that your crowd should take action accordingly? Inverse: aloof.

25. Ready: effortless and rich. This is the quality that includes a large number of the others. All the equivalent words apply here: confident, made, honorable, in unlimited authority. Inverse: awkward.

26. Present: completely mindful and occupied with the current circumstance. Concentrate on what's going on, as it occurs. Inverse: diverted.

27. Loose: being agreeable (not tense or on edge). Set a quiet pace for your introduction. Inverse: anxious.

28. Reasonable: effortlessly comprehended—by your crowd, which is the basic part. Inverse: limitless.

Twenty-eight characteristics to grasp and encapsulate Presently it's up to you. Everything necessary is practice and execution to ace these abilities.

4.1.5 Capturing and Maintaining Attention

Capturing and maintaining attention in business communication is crucial for effectively conveying your message and ensuring that your audience remains engaged. Here are some strategies to help you capture and maintain attention:

1. Start with a strong opening: Begin your communication with a compelling statement, an interesting fact, or a thought-provoking question that grabs your audience's attention from the start. This will create a sense of intrigue and make them more likely to pay attention to the rest of your message.
2. Use storytelling: Humans are naturally drawn to stories. Incorporate relevant and engaging stories into your business communication to capture your audience's attention. Stories help to create an emotional connection and make your message more memorable.
3. Be concise and to the point: In today's fast-paced world, people have shorter attention spans. Get to the main point of your message quickly and avoid unnecessary details or rambling. Keep your communication clear, concise, and focused on what is most important.
4. Utilise visual aids: Visuals can significantly enhance your communication and make it more attention-grabbing. Incorporate relevant images, graphs, charts, or videos to support your message. Visual aids help break up the monotony of text and make your content more visually appealing.
5. Use varied communication mediums: Mix up your communication mediums to keep things fresh and interesting. Instead of relying solely on written emails or memos, consider using video messages, presentations, or interactive platforms.

4.1.6 Handling Questions

Handling questions effectively during a presentation is crucial for successful business communication. It allows you to engage with your audience, address any concerns or doubts, and provide additional clarity on your topic. Here are some tips for handling questions in an effective presentation:

© Amity University Online

Notes

1. Be prepared: Anticipate potential questions that your audience might have and prepare answers in advance. This will help you respond confidently and provide accurate information. Familiarise yourself with the topic and gather relevant supporting data or examples to back up your answers.
2. Encourage questions throughout: Create an open and welcoming environment for questions by encouraging your audience to ask throughout the presentation. Let them know that their questions are valued and that you're open to addressing any concerns they may have. This helps maintain engagement and ensures that participants feel comfortable seeking clarification.
3. Active listening: When someone asks a question, actively listen to them. Maintain eye contact, nod to acknowledge their question, and avoid interrupting. This shows respect and attentiveness, making the questioner feel valued. It also allows you to fully understand their question before providing a response.
4. Repeat or paraphrase the question: After a question is asked, repeat or paraphrase it to ensure everyone in the audience hears it and understands it. Rephrasing the question also gives you an opportunity to confirm your understanding of the question and ensures you address the right point. It also helps the questioner feel heard and understood.
5. Be concise and focused: When answering questions, aim to provide clear and concise responses. Keep your answers focused on the specific question asked and avoid going off on tangents. Use language that is easily understood by the audience, avoiding jargon or technical terms that may confuse them.
6. Stay calm and composed: Sometimes, questions may be challenging or critical. It's important to remain calm, composed, and professional when responding. Avoid becoming defensive or confrontational. Instead, view questions as opportunities to clarify your points or address any misconceptions.
7. Use visual aids or examples: Whenever possible, use visual aids, such as charts, graphs, or diagrams, to support your answers. Visuals can help simplify complex concepts and make your explanations more accessible. Additionally, providing real-life examples or case studies can further enhance your answers and make them more relatable to the audience.
8. Don't be afraid to say, "I don't know": If you're unsure of the answer to a question, it's better to admit it rather than providing incorrect information. Acknowledge that you don't have the answer at the moment, but assure the questioner that you will follow up with them later. This demonstrates honesty and integrity, and it gives you an opportunity to provide accurate information at a later time.
9. Manage time effectively: Be mindful of the time available for questions and allocate it accordingly. If you have limited time, politely let the audience know how much time is remaining for questions and encourage them to ask their most important ones. If time runs out and you couldn't address all the questions, offer alternative ways for participants to reach out to you for further clarification or follow-up.
10. Thank the questioner: Show appreciation for each question asked, regardless of its complexity or relevance. Thanking the questioner demonstrates respect and encourages others to participate as well.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

4.1.7 PowerPoint Presentation

PowerPoint Presentation

Central Rules Building Powerful and Engaging Presentation Slides Before we go into tips and deceives on the most proficient method to add energy to your introductions, it's basic to get the essentials of your introduction right.

Start with composing your discourse layout, not with assembling slides. Your PowerPoint introduction is there to praise your message, and the story you are telling. Before you can even assemble slides, you have to recognise the objective of your discourse, and the key takeaways you need your crowd to recollect. you and your discourse are the focal point of this introduction, not the slides – utilise your PowerPoint to commend your story. Utilise more pictures and less content. Remember that your slides are there to add to your discourse, not occupy from it. Utilising a lot of text in your slides can be diverting and confounding to your crowd. Rather, utilise a pertinent picture with insignificant content, "words usually can't do a picture justice."

Utilise excellent pictures; Remember your crowd when planning your introduction, their experience and style sense. You will need to keep away from the default cut workmanship and messy illustrations on your slides. Maintain the attention on you and your introduction, not the PowerPoint. While introducing try to control the introduction and the room by strolling around, causing to notice you and what you are stating. You ought to every so often stop while referring to a slide, yet never turn your back to your crowd to peruse your slide.

You and your discourse are the introductions; the slides are only there to help you. Your introduction ought to be clear from anyplace in the room. Most season moderators don't utilise anything short of 28-point text dimension, and even Steve Jobs was known to utilise nothing littler than forty-point text textual styles. On the off chance that you can't easily fit all the content on your slide utilising 28 text dimensions than you're attempting to state and pack a lot into the slide, recall tip #1.4 – Use significant pictures rather and go with it with projectiles.

Revised Explanation:

"If you find that you cannot fit all the content on your slide using a 28-point font size, then you might be attempting to convey and pack too much information into the slide. In such a situation, it's essential to remember tip #1.4 – Use relevant images instead and complement them with bullet points."

This explanation suggests that if the content on a slide cannot be comfortably accommodated with a 28-point font size, it indicates there might be an overload of information. To address this issue, two recommendations are provided.

Use Relevant Images: Instead of trying to cram excessive text, consider using images that are directly related to the content. Visuals can often convey information more effectively than lengthy paragraphs.

Complement with Bullet Points: If some essential textual information must be included, use bullet points to present it concisely. Bullet points are easier to read, and digest compared to dense paragraphs.

© Amity University Online

Notes

By following these recommendations, presenters can maintain a visually appealing and impactful slide while ensuring that the audience can understand and retain the key points effectively.

Utilise A Consistent Presentation Design The activity of your introduction is to help pass on data as effectively and plainly as could reasonably be expected. By keeping the topic and structure predictable, you're permitting the data and pictures to stick out. Anyway, by shifting the plan from slide to slide, you will create turmoil and diverting from the center, which is you and the data to be passed on the slide.

One Topic Per Slide; each slide should attempt to speak to one theme or idea. The objective is to keep the consideration concentrated on your discourse, and by utilising one slide for every idea; you make it simple for you to get ready, just as simple for your crowd to track with your discourse.

Keep away from data overpower by utilising the "Rule of Three" In some cases while making our introduction, we can regularly get in our minds and attempt to over clarify. A basic method to evade this is to follow the "Rule of Three," an idea instituted by the antiquated Greek thinker Aristotle. The thought is to adhere to just 3 fundamental thoughts that will help convey your point. Every one of the thoughts can be additionally broken into 3 sections to clarify further. The best current case of this "Rule of Three" can be taken from the incomparable Apple introductions given by Steve Jobs – they were constantly organised around the "Rule of Three."

Précis: The Rule of Three in Effective Communication

To avoid data overload and excessive explanations in our introductions, we can employ the "Rule of Three," inspired by Aristotle. This principle suggests sticking to three core ideas to convey our point effectively. Each of these ideas can be further divided into three parts for elaboration. A contemporary illustration of this rule is evident in Steve Jobs' Apple presentations, where he consistently structured his talks around the "Rule of Three."

Explanation of the Rule of Three:

The Rule of Three is a persuasive communication technique that dates back to ancient rhetoric and has been employed in various forms of storytelling, public speaking, and marketing. The concept is based on the idea that people tend to remember information presented in threes more easily and find it more satisfying than other numerical groupings.

The Rule of Three works on several levels:

1. Memorability: Human memory is naturally tuned to remember patterns and groupings. Three is the smallest number of elements required to create a pattern, making it easier for the audience to retain the information.
2. Rhythm and Flow: Triads create a pleasing rhythm in speech or writing, making the communication more engaging and memorable. This rhythm helps keep the audience's attention and enhances the overall delivery of the message.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

3. Emphasis and Impact: Presenting three points allows the speaker or writer to emphasise the most critical aspects of their message. It helps in driving home the main idea and leaves a lasting impact on the audience.
4. Simplicity: Keeping the message to three key points ensures simplicity and clarity. It prevents overwhelming the audience with excessive information and maintains focus on the most essential aspects.

In Steve Jobs' Apple presentations, he often followed the Rule of Three by presenting three major product features, three reasons to embrace innovation, or three elements of a company strategy. This structure not only made the content more memorable but also facilitated a seamless flow of ideas.

In conclusion, whether in public speaking, writing, or any form of communication, embracing the Rule of Three can enhance clarity, engagement, and impact, leading to more effective and persuasive messaging.

Show each sentence in turn: In the event that you are intending to remember text for your slides, attempt to stay away from slug records, and utilise one slide for every sentence. Be short and succinct. This best practice centers on the possibility that straightforward messages are anything but difficult to hold in memory. Likewise, each slide can follow your narrating way, presenting the crowd in every idea while you talk, rather than posting everything in advance.

Introduction Blunders to Avoid, Evade pointless movements. In all actuality, there is no requirement for movements or advances in your slides. It's incredible to realise how to transform your content into flames or how to make a change with shimmer impacts, however the fact of the matter is the attention ought to be on the message. Utilising essential or no changes lets the substance of your introduction stick out, instead of the designs. In the event that you intend to utilise movements, try to utilise current and expert activities that enables the crowd to follow the story you are telling, for instance when clarifying time arrangement or changing occasions after some time. Just include content that underpins your primary concerns

You may have an incredible diagram, picture or even expression you need to include, however while making each slide, it's essential to ask yourself the accompanying inquiry.

If this slide does not effectively address my main concern, it should be removed. Remember, less is more. Avoid using PowerPoint as a crutch. Novice presenters often rely on slides as their main focus. However, it is essential to limit the amount of text on your slides. If you need to refer to something, consider using small cue cards that can be held discreetly. Never betray your audience by reading directly from the PowerPoint slides. By doing so, you shift the spotlight onto the presentation itself and lose your connection with the audience.

Dodge To Give Out Copies of the Presentation: At any rate not before conveying the introduction; giving duplicates of your introduction gives your crowd a potential interruption where they can flip through the duplicate and overlook what you are stating. It's likewise simple for them to take your slides outside of any relevant connection to the subject at hand without understanding the significance behind each slide. It's OK to give a duplicate of the introduction, however by and large it is smarter to give the duplicates after you have conveyed your discourse.

© Amity University Online

Notes

Re-concentrate on you by blurring into obscurity. The purpose of your introduction is to help convey a message. While developing an especially significant subject that requires a protracted clarification it's ideal to blur the slide into dark. This eliminates any interruption from the screen and re-centers it around you, the current speaker. Some introduction gadgets have an implicit dark screen button, yet in the event that they don't, you can generally plan for this by including a dark side into your introduction at the correct second.

Change the tone of your voice while introducing, "It's not what you state, it's the means by which you state it. To establish a meaningful connection during your introduction, it is crucial to utilise all the available tools and resources to effectively express your thoughts and ideas. Changing the expression and tone of your voice as you present helps make the substance and the focus more essential. Host a specialist conversation board; one simple and incredible approach to make your introduction intelligent is specialists to examine a specific subject during your introduction. This makes an additionally captivating introduction and enables you to encourage and lead a conversation around your subject. It's ideal to set up certain inquiries for your board yet to likewise handle inquiries from the crowd in an inquiry and answer design.

Step by step instructions to Make Your Presentation More Interactive

Pose inquiries

What occurs in the event that I get some information about a pink elephant? You presumably quickly consider a pink elephant, correct? Posing inquiries when introducing draws in the crowd, excite intrigue and interest. It likewise has the additional advantage of making individuals give nearer consideration, in the event that they get approached. So don't be reluctant to pose inquiries, regardless of whether logical; posing an inquiry draws in an alternate piece of our cerebrum. It makes us reflect instead of only taking in the data one way. So, ask numerous them.

Implant recordings

Recollect the purpose of your introduction is to get a point or message across and despite the fact that you are the moderator; it is totally fine to utilise video in your PowerPoint. A pertinent video can give you some breathing chance to set up the following slides while similarly illuminating the crowd on a specific point. Alert: Be certain to test the video in advance, and that your crowd can hear it in the room. Utilise live surveying to get moment input and connect with the crowd A drifting commitment apparatus among moderators is to utilise a live surveying instrument to permit the crowd to take an interest and gather quick input.

It's critical to recollect when attempting to convey a stunning encounter, you ought to be completely arranged. This incorporates having your exploration referred to, your introduction practiced. Don't simply practice your slides, additionally set aside effort to rehearse your conveyance, and your tone. The more you practice, the more loosened up you will be while conveying. The surer you will feel. While we can't assist you with

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

the rehearsing of your next introduction, we can help you by ensuring you look great, and that you have an incredible structure and cohesiveness.

4.2 Writing for the Web

4.2.1 Netiquette

Netiquette: Navigating Online Interactions with Courtesy and Respect

In the digital age, proper decorum is essential when interacting with others online. As the rules and norms of online communication continue to evolve, understanding and practicing netiquette can be a bit confusing. This set of guidelines is designed to promote courteous and respectful interactions in the online realm, including virtual classrooms. Here are ten netiquette rules every online student should be aware of:

1. Avoid "Yelling": Typing in all caps is generally considered inappropriate as it may come across as shouting. Adjust your text display settings if needed for better visibility without giving the impression of anger.
2. Be Mindful of Sarcasm: Sarcasm can be misinterpreted online, leading to misunderstandings and conflicts. To prevent confusion, it's best to avoid using sarcasm altogether and instead communicate directly and politely.
3. Respect Chat Boxes: Chat boxes in online classes are meant for relevant questions and discussions related to the lesson. Avoid diverting the conversation with unrelated topics and focus on meaningful interactions.
4. Try to Find Solutions Independently: Before immediately seeking help, attempt to solve any confusion or challenges on your own. Check the course materials, syllabus, or use search engines to find answers before asking questions.
5. Pay Attention to Grammar: Use proper punctuation, spelling, and grammar to ensure clear communication. However, avoid being overly critical of others' grammar mistakes and instead, be understanding.
6. Maintain a Respectful Tone: Address your instructors and classmates with formality and politeness in email communication. Use complete sentences and customary greetings like "please" and "thank you."
7. Follow Submission Guidelines: Adhere to the specific file-naming conventions and formats provided by instructors for submitting assignments. Failing to do so may lead to confusion and difficulty in locating or opening your work.
8. Read and Understand Before Responding: Before participating in class discussions, read all previous responses to avoid repeating points that have already been addressed. Engage thoughtfully and contribute something new to the discussion.
9. Think Before You Write: Be cautious about sharing personal information online, as the internet retains a permanent digital record. Exercise prudence in what you share and treat others with the same respect you would in person.
10. Be Thoughtful and Professional: Online interactions might offer some anonymity, but remember to be courteous and considerate in your comments, even if you disagree

© Amity University Online

Notes

with others. Maintain the same level of respect and professionalism as you would in a physical classroom.

By adhering to these netiquette rules, you can create a positive online learning environment where respectful and meaningful interactions thrive. Remember, practice makes perfect, and with time, these netiquette habits will become second nature, enhancing your overall online learning experience.

4.2.2 Professional Profiles

A Professional Profile is a concise summary of your skills, strengths, and significant experiences. It serves as an introduction, highlighting what you are seeking or what value you can bring to the reader. This profile can be likened to an elevator pitch, a brief in-person introduction used for networking at job fairs or professional events. Alternatively, it can be utilized in your LinkedIn profile or other written materials to generate interest in your qualifications and aspirations.

Offer in an expert limit. Here are a few rules for making a convincing proficient profile:

Keep it brief and centered; obviously there are a lot of brilliant things you could state about your experience and abilities. Businesses and potential guides simply need to know the most applicable data. Think about your crowd, realising who will peruse your profile will illuminate the sort regarding data you incorporate.

Don't hesitate to incorporate language or specialised data if the crowd hears what you're saying, however stick to adaptable abilities and individual characteristics on the off chance that they don't. Represent with models "Solid relational abilities" and "initiative characteristics" don't mean a lot to managers without setting. Draw

From extracurricular exercises, research understanding, coursework, and volunteers or work understanding to give models of your aptitudes. Be clear about what you're chasing

Need to make sure about a temporary job or full-time position upon graduation? Simply searching for data about a vocation field you're thinking about? There's a major contrast, and individuals like to know how they will support you. Make it simple for them by being open about your desires. Lead with eye-getting words and expressions Proclamations inside expert profiles will in general be sentence pieces that stress your adaptable abilities (see models beneath). Also, work to pass on your eagerness and character as much as possible.

Here are a few instances of expert profiles for Chemistry majors:

- Junior chemistry major looking for a research opportunity THIS SUMMER. Especially keen on natural, bioorganic, or biochemical exploration, yet open to anything. Energized and excited about science and would welcome any chance to apply my scholastic foundation to a commonsense examination question. Broad lab experience from Hamline and has aced most substance strategies. Much thanks to you such a great amount for any data or gets in touch with you may have.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

- Ambitious and diligent science significant looking for a mid-year temporary position in BUSINESS or Counseling. Critical thinking, scientific, and relational abilities created through science research undertakings and administration experience. Relational aptitudes sharpened through different extracurricular exercises including track group and sorting out nearby occasions and projects. In the event that no open doors come to mind I would likewise love to discuss your vocation way and encounters with your organization.

4.2.3 Blogs

A blog, short for "weblog," is an online platform or informational website that presents content in reverse chronological order, with the latest posts appearing at the top. It allows an individual or a group of writers to share their perspectives on a specific subject. The primary purpose of a blog can vary depending on whether it is for personal use or business.

For business blogging, the main goal is to improve website visibility and rank higher in Google searches, ultimately reaching potential customers and increasing traffic. Blogs serve as effective lead generation tools, encouraging audience engagement and converting website visitors into high-quality leads. They also help showcase expertise in a particular niche and build a brand, enhancing the business's credibility and online presence.

A typical blog structure includes a header with navigation, a main content area featuring the latest blog posts, a sidebar with social profiles or a call to action, and a footer with relevant links like disclaimers or contact information.

In the past, there was a clearer distinction between blogs and websites. Blogs received frequent updates, allowed reader engagement through comments, and had specific elements like publishing dates, categories, and tags. Websites, on the other hand, had static content that didn't change with each visit. However, as time has passed, the line between blogs and websites has become more blurred, with many businesses integrating blogs into their websites.

Blogging has become increasingly popular due to various factors. Blogs provide individuals with a platform to share their lives, experiences, and opinions with a wide audience. They allow readers to engage and interact with the blogger, creating a community of loyal followers. Additionally, blogs can be monetised through various methods, such as selling ad space, affiliate marketing, selling digital products, and using them as content marketing tools for businesses.

Blogging can be a lucrative career, but it requires time, effort, and consistent high-quality content to build credibility and attract a substantial audience. To start a blog, one needs to choose a domain name, select a suitable blogging platform, and decide on a web hosting service.

Self-hosted platforms like WordPress.org are highly recommended for those starting a blog. Overall, blogging offers a means of sharing knowledge, connecting with like-minded individuals, and potentially earning income by pursuing a passion or niche interest.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

4.3 Correspondence

4.3.1 Letters

Letter Writing

Writing a clear and readable letter is a skill every educated person should possess. Whether it's for personal or business purposes, there will come a time when one needs to write important letters that could significantly impact their life. Letter writing is not just a decorative skill; it's an essential ability that every educated individual must acquire.

Letter Form

Letters are essentially messages, and there are established forms that every letter writer should be familiar with. Neglecting these forms reflects ignorance and carelessness. Although different kinds of letters exist (such as friendly letters and business letters), certain points of form apply universally to all.The six points of form that every letter should address are as follows:

1) Heading: Includes the writer's address and the date.
2) Salutation or Greeting: The polite way of addressing the recipient.
3) The body of the letter: The main communication or message.
4) The Subscription or courteous Leave-taking: The conclusion of the letter.
5) The Signature: The writer's name.
6) The address on the envelope or postcard.

The Heading

The heading provides information about where and when the letter was written. The writer's full postal address constitutes the "were," offering a reply address for the recipient. The date serves as a reference point, indicating when the letter was written.]

The Salutation or Greeting

The appropriate greeting used depends on the relationship with the recipient. For family members, more personal greetings are used, while business-related greetings are more formal, such as "Dear Sir" or "Dear Madam." The salutation should be positioned on the left-hand side below the heading.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

The Communication or Body of the Letter

The body of the letter will vary depending on the type of letter being written. Regardless of the content, it is essential to use simple and direct language with proper punctuation. Divide the letter into paragraphs for clarity and completeness.

The Subscription or courteous Leave-taking

A letter should not end abruptly; it requires a polite leave-taking phrase such as "Yours sincerely" or "Your faithfully." The subscription is placed at the right or left side below the last words of the letter.

The Signature or Name of the Writer

The writer's name should appear below the subscription to sign off the letter. For letters to strangers, ensure the signature is legible for a proper response.

Address on the Envelope (or Postcard)

The envelope or postcard should have a clear and properly written address.

Classification of Letters

Letters can be categorized based on their purposes, such as social letters (friendly letters and invitations) and business letters (application letters, letters to government officers, and letters to newspapers).

In conclusion, knowing how to write a letter with proper form and content is an indispensable skill for all educated individuals, as it serves various personal and professional purposes.

4.3.2 Emails

Writing emails in an effective and professional manner is crucial in today's digital age. Email communication has become an integral part of both personal and professional interactions. When you present yourself effectively through your emails, you can convey your message clearly, build strong relationships, and achieve your desired outcomes. Here are some key reasons why effective email presentation is important and beneficial:

1. Clarity and Conciseness: Writing emails in an effective presentation ensures that your message is clear and easily understood. By organizing your thoughts, using

© Amity University Online

Notes

concise language, and structuring your email effectively, you can avoid confusion and misinterpretation. This clarity saves time for both the sender and the recipient, enabling efficient communication.

2. Professionalism and Credibility: A well-written email reflects your professionalism and attention to detail. It demonstrates that you value the recipient's time and are committed to clear and professional communication. By presenting yourself in a professional manner, you enhance your credibility and reputation.

3. Building Relationships: Effective email presentation plays a significant role in building and maintaining relationships, both in personal and professional contexts. When you communicate with respect, courtesy, and empathy, you foster positive connections with others. By using appropriate language, tone, and formatting, you can establish rapport, trust, and mutual understanding.

4. Positive Impression: Emails are often the first point of contact in various situations, such as job applications, business inquiries, or networking. An effectively presented email helps create a positive first impression, which can significantly impact the recipient's perception of you. By showcasing your professionalism, competence, and attention to detail, you increase your chances of receiving favorable responses.

5. Time Management: When emails are presented effectively, they save time for both the sender and the recipient. Clear and concise emails enable the recipient to understand the message quickly and respond appropriately. Additionally, organizing your email content in a logical and structured manner allows the recipient to locate important information easily, minimizing the need for follow-up questions or clarification.

6. Achieving Desired Outcomes: Effective email presentation enhances your ability to achieve the desired outcomes from your communication. By clearly stating your purpose, providing necessary information, and making specific requests, you increase the likelihood of receiving the desired response or action. Well-presented emails also help to minimize misunderstandings and facilitate effective decision-making.

7. Documentation and Reference: Emails serve as a written record of communication, providing a valuable reference for future interactions. When you present your emails effectively, it becomes easier to locate and reference specific details or agreements. This documentation can be especially useful in professional settings, such as project management, client communication, or legal matters.

In conclusion, effective email presentation is vital for clear communication, professionalism, relationship building, time management, and achieving desired outcomes. By paying attention to clarity, professionalism, and conciseness in your email writing, you can enhance your overall communication skills and increase the likelihood of successful interactions in both personal and professional settings.

4.3.3 Memo

Memo

A memo, short for "Memorandum," is a commonly used form of communication in the business world. It serves as a brief and straightforward means of providing

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

reminders or instructions within an organization. Memos are cost-effective and efficient in reaching a large number of people simultaneously, making them an essential tool for mass communication.

The format of a memo includes the following elements:

1. Heading: The word "Memo" or "Memorandum" is written at the top center of the page after the company's name and address, which is usually on the letterhead.
2. Recipients: The memo is addressed to specific recipients, often with a clear description, such as "To: All Employees of the Sales Division."
3. Author: The name of the person writing the memo is mentioned, along with their designation, e.g., "From: Mr. ABC, Head of Sales."
4. Additional Recipients: Some individuals may receive courtesy copies of the memo for information purposes.
5. Date: The date of writing the memo is an essential detail to include.
6. Headline: A brief and precise subject line is included to give the reader an idea of the memo's content.
7. Body: The main content of the memo provides the necessary information without the need for a formal greeting. The body should be clear and concise, avoiding unnecessary details. The memo's conclusion should reiterate the main issue and conclude strongly.
8. Edit: The memo should be thoroughly proofread before dissemination.

Example of a memo requesting the bookkeeping department to attend training on the new software adopted by the company:

Memorandum

To: All Employees of the Accounting Department

From: Mr. XYZ, Head of Accounts

CC: Ms. ABC, HR Department

Date: 25th October 2018

Subject: Mandatory Training for the New Software

As you are all aware, our company has recently implemented new accounting software to improve our accounting processes and make them more efficient in terms of time and cost. To ensure a smooth transition and facilitate the use of the new software, a training session has been scheduled for 5th November 2018 at 9 am. All staff members of the Accounting Department are required to attend the training.

[Your name and designation]

[Your contact information]

Summary

- Effective presentation involves various elements such as preparation, practice, and delivery.

© Amity University Online

Notes

- The presenter must thoroughly prepare by researching the topic, organizing the content, and understanding the audience.
- Practice is crucial to ensure a smooth delivery and to become familiar with the material.
- Delivery involves using effective body language, maintaining eye contact, and engaging the audience.
- A skillful presenter possesses certain qualities that contribute to their success. These qualities include confidence, enthusiasm, clarity, and the ability to connect with the audience.
- PowerPoint presentations are a commonly used tool for visual aid during presentations. It is essential to create visually appealing slides that support the key points of the presentation without overwhelming the audience.
- Writing for the web requires a different approach compared to traditional writing.
- Web content should be concise, scannable, and easily digestible. It should also be optimized for search engines by incorporating relevant keywords. Writing for the web involves structuring content with headings, subheadings, bullet points, and hyperlinks to improve readability and navigation.
- Email writing is an essential communication skill in the modern workplace.
- Effective email writing involves clear and concise messaging, proper grammar and punctuation, and a professional tone. It is important to consider the audience and purpose of the email, as well as using appropriate subject lines and greetings.
- Memos, or memorandums, are commonly used for internal communication within organizations. They are typically brief, formal documents used to convey important information or instructions.
- Memos should be well-structured, with a clear purpose and organized content. They should be written in a professional tone and include necessary details while avoiding unnecessary information.

Glossary

- Effective presentation: A well-organized and engaging presentation that effectively communicates information or ideas to an audience, leaving a lasting impact.
- Preparation: The process of getting ready for a presentation, including researching the topic, organizing the content, and creating visual aids or supporting materials.
- Practice: Rehearsing a presentation before delivering it, typically done to improve delivery, timing, and overall performance.
- Delivery of presentation: The manner in which a presentation is presented or conveyed to an audience, including speaking style, body language, and use of visual aids.
- PowerPoint presentation: A type of visual presentation created using Microsoft PowerPoint software, typically consisting of slides with text, images, and multimedia elements.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- Letters: Written correspondences usually sent by mail or email, formal or informal, to convey a message, request information, or express thoughts or opinions.
- Email writing: The process of composing and sending emails, involving proper etiquette, clarity, concise communication, and appropriate tone.
- Memo: A short document or communication used within an organization to convey important information, instructions, or announcements to a specific group of people. Memos are typically formal in nature and may be distributed electronically or in print.

Check Your Understanding

1. Which of the following is NOT a key component of an effective presentation?
   a) Engaging content
   b) Clear and concise message
   c) Excessive use of jargon
   d) Effective visuals
2. What is the purpose of practicing a presentation beforehand?
   a) To ensure the presentation fits within the time limit
   b) To reduce nervousness and build confidence
   c) To memorize the entire presentation word-for-word
   d) To add unnecessary details to the presentation
3. Which of the following is NOT an essential component of a well-written letter?
   a) Proper salutation and closing
   b) Concise and clear paragraphs
   c) Exaggerated language and excessive adjectives
   d) Correct grammar and punctuation
4. What is an important consideration when writing content for the web?
   a) Using long paragraphs and dense blocks of text
   b) Ignoring the use of headings and subheadings
   c) Incorporating relevant keywords for search engine optimization (SEO)
   d) Avoiding hyperlinks and multimedia elements
5. Which of the following is a characteristic of a well-crafted email?
   a) Including personal rants and unrelated anecdotes
   b) Writing in a formal and stiff tone
   c) Using a clear subject line and concise message
   d) Ignoring the recipient's perspective and needs
6. What is the purpose of a memo?
   a) To communicate detailed information to a large audience
   b) To express personal opinions and emotions

© Amity University Online

Notes

c) To request a leave of absence from work

d) To invite colleagues to a social event

7. Which of the following strategies is most effective for capturing and maintaining attention in a presentation?

a) Speaking in a monotone voice

b) Using excessive text on slides

c) Incorporating engaging visuals and storytelling

d) Avoiding eye contact with the audience

8. How should you handle questions during a presentation?

a) Ignore the questions and continue with your presentation

b) Answer each question briefly without elaborating

c) Encourage audience participation and address questions respectfully

d) Ask the audience to save their questions until the end

9. What does “netiquette” refer to?

a) Etiquette rules for using the internet and online communication

b) A type of fishing technique

c) A form of social networking

d) A programming language used for web development

10. What is important when creating a professional profile in writing for the web?

a) Using informal language and abbreviations

b) Including personal information like your home address and phone number

c) Highlighting relevant skills and accomplishments

d) Using multiple fonts and colors for emphasis

11. What is a key aspect of writing blogs and web journals?

a) Including long paragraphs with minimal formatting

b) Using technical jargon to impress readers

c) Providing valuable and engaging content for the target audience

d) Copying content from other sources without proper attribution

12. What should you consider when writing a letter?

a) Using complex vocabulary to sound more sophisticated

b) Keeping the tone informal and casual

c) Structuring the letter with a clear introduction, body, and conclusion

d) Omitting your contact information to maintain privacy

13. What is a good practice when writing emails?

a) Using a generic and vague subject line

b) Writing lengthy emails without any line breaks

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

c) Addressing the recipient by their first name

d) Proofreading and editing the email before sending

14. Which of the following is a potential benefit of maintaining an online journal?

a) Limited access to personal thoughts and experiences.

b) Increased vulnerability to online attacks and data breaches.

c) Enhanced self-reflection and personal growth.

d) Reduction in communication skills and self-expression.

15. What should you do if you receive an email or message that upsets you?

a) Respond immediately with an angry reply.

b) Forward the message to all your contacts.

c) Take some time to calm down before responding.

d) Ignore the message and don't respond at all.

16. Structure of Presentation: Why is it important to have a clear structure in a presentation?

a) It allows for more creativity and spontaneity during the presentation.

b) It helps to confuse the audience and make the presentation more engaging.

c) It provides a logical flow and helps the audience understand the content better.

d) It allows the presenter to skip important information and save time.

17. Which of the following is an example of a popular online journal platform?

a) Facebook

b) LinkedIn

c) Medium

d) WhatsApp

18. What should you consider before sharing someone else's content online?

a) Ask for permission from the original creator.

b) Alter the content to make it more interesting.

c) Share the content without giving credit to the creator.

d) Share the content on as many platforms as possible.

19. Which of the following is a common way to organize the main points in a presentation?

a) Randomly jumping from one point to another.

b) Presenting the most important point first and then the least important ones.

c) Using bullet points to list all the points without any particular order.

d) Organizing the points in a logical sequence or by importance.

20. What is the primary purpose of an online journal?

a) To showcase professional achievements and qualifications.

© Amity University Online

Notes

b) To entertain the readers with fictional stories and anecdotes.

c) To express personal thoughts, experiences, and emotions.

d) To share breaking news and current events

Exercise

1. What is pre-presentation jitter? Write some methods on how overcome it.
2. Prepare a presentation on your World Religions and demonstrate in your group.
3. Write few qualities of a skillful presenter.
4. While delivering the presentation, how will you manage to hold the attention of the crowd. What will be the techniques you will be using?
5. How will you make your power point presentation interesting.
6. Netiquette in 2020?
7. Read your favorite blog and discuss with your friends.
8. Supposedly you have to make a blog, define its name, its objective & its target audience.
9. Write a letter to your district MLA, mentioning about the sports facilities in your colony and request for support which can further enhance the structure and facilities in the complex you live.
10. Help anyone in your family who is working in making or revising their professional profile.

Learning Activities

1. What are the key elements of an effective presentation? How can you ensure that your presentation is well-prepared and delivered smoothly?
2. What strategies can you use to engage your audience during a presentation and maintain their interest throughout?
3. What qualities and skills are essential for a skillful presenter? How can one develop and improve these qualities?
4. When writing a letter, what are the important considerations to keep in mind to ensure clear communication and a professional tone?
5. What are the key differences between writing for the web and writing for other mediums? How can one optimize their writing for online readability and user engagement?
6. What are the essential components of an effective email? How can one strike the right balance between being concise and conveying the necessary information?

Check Your Understanding- Answer

1. c) Excessive use of jargon
2. b) To reduce nervousness and build confidence

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

3. c) Exaggerated language and excessive adjectives
4. c) Incorporating relevant keywords for search engine optimization (SEO)
5. c) Using a clear subject line and concise message
6. a) To communicate detailed information to a large audience
7. c) Incorporating engaging visuals and storytelling
8. c) Encourage audience participation and address questions respectfully
9. a) Etiquette rules for using the internet and online communication
10. c) Highlighting relevant skills and accomplishments
11. c) Providing valuable and engaging content for the target audience
12. c) Structuring the letter with a clear introduction, body, and conclusion
13. d) Proofreading and editing the email before sending
14. c) Enhanced self-reflection and personal growth
15. c) Take some time to calm down before responding
16. c) It provides a logical flow and helps the audience understand the content better.
17. c) Medium
18. a) Ask for permission from the original creator.
19. d) Organizing the points in a logical sequence or by importance.
20. c) To express personal thoughts, experiences, and emotions.

Further Readings and Bibliography

1. Presentation Skills. http://psydilab.univer.kharkov.ua/resources/ucheba/softskills/chapter%205.pdf
2. Business Communication: https://www.icsi.edu/media/webmodules/CSEET/BUSINESS_COMMUNICATION.pdf

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Module - 5: Employment Communication

Learning Objectives:

At the end of this topic, you will be able to:

- Understand the process of writing an effective resume
- Learn the qualities and strategies to participate in a group discussion and mock group discussion sessions

Introduction

Effective employment communication is crucial for the smooth functioning of Organisations and the establishment of productive working relationships. It plays a vital role in fostering understanding, collaboration, and alignment among all stakeholders involved in the employment process.

In the context of recruitment and hiring, employment communication involves the dissemination of job advertisements, job descriptions, and application instructions to attract suitable candidates. It also includes the interviewing and selection process, where communication skills are essential to evaluate candidates' qualifications and potential fit within the organisation.

5.1 Reports

5.1.1 Functions and Types of Reports

Functions of Report and Types of Reports

A report serves as a written document tailored for a specific audience, aiming to present, analyse, and apply specific information and evidence to address a particular issue. Organising the information into well-structured sections and headings ensures easy comprehension and accessibility. When assigned to write a report, you'll receive a report brief containing instructions and guidelines, including the purpose, audience, problem, and formatting requirements. This guide provides a general introduction to report writing, but be sure to consider any specific instructions from your educational institution.

Reports are widely used for two main purposes:

- ❖ To assess your understanding of the subject matter you've read, researched, or experienced.
- ❖ To provide you with practical experience in a valuable skill commonly utilised in professional settings.

An effective report should present relevant facts and evidence that directly relate to the specific problem or issue outlined in the report brief. Proper acknowledgment and citation of all sources used are crucial, following the preferred citation style in your field. The writing style in a report is typically more concise than an essay, employing straightforward and economical language. A well-written report demonstrates your ability to:

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- Comprehend the purpose and specifications of the report brief.
- Gather, evaluate, and analyze relevant information.
- Structure the content logically and coherently.
- Present the report consistently according to the provided instructions.
- Draw appropriate conclusions supported by evidence and analysis.
- Provide thoughtful and practical recommendations as needed.

The Structure of a Report

1. Cover Sheet:

   The report's purpose should be clearly stated, along with your name, date, and the intended recipient.

2. Terms of Reference:

   A brief explanation of who will read the report, the reason for writing it, and the methods used. This can be a heading or a single paragraph.

3. Summary (Abstract):

   The summary briefly describes the report's content, covering the key points, findings, and timeframe. It should be concise and avoid excessive detail or discussion, providing a helpful overview of the report.

4. Table of Contents:

   The contents page lists the sections and headings with page numbers for easy navigation. Numbering of sections and subheadings should be clear and consistent throughout.

5. Introduction:

   The introduction sets the stage for the main body of the report, explaining the report's objectives and scope. Identify any limitations and provide a description of research methods and background information if necessary.

6. Methods:

   Under this heading, provide details such as a list of equipment used, explanations of procedures followed, relevant information on materials used, sources of materials, and any necessary preparation. Mention any encountered issues and subsequent changes in approach.

7. Results:

   This section presents an overview of the research or investigation's findings, often supported by charts, diagrams, or tables of gathered data. Results should be presented in a logical order without commentary; discussion of the results occurs in the main body (Discussion) of the report.

8. Discussion:

   The main body of the report is where you discuss your findings and evidence, specifically addressing the problem or issue. Long discussion sections can be divided into subsections with headings for clarity. Use bullet points for easy-to-follow lists. Proper acknowledgment and citation of all sources are essential.

© Amity University Online

Notes

9. Conclusion:

   The conclusion highlights the overall significance of the report's contents. Remind the reader of the most crucial points or central findings. No new information should be introduced in the conclusion.

10. Appendices:

    Include supporting data that is not published, such as tables, graphs, surveys, or records. Refer to the appendices in the report's main body.

11. Acknowledgments:

    When appropriate, acknowledge the support of specific Organisations or individuals who provided information, advice, or assistance.

12. Glossary of Technical Terms:

    A sequential list of specialised terms with concise explanations, including abbreviations or standard units used in the report.

    In conclusion, mastering report writing is vital for effective communication, evaluation, and decision-making in various fields. Understanding the types and functions of reports is essential for academic and professional success in report writing.

5.1.2 Report and Proposal Process

The Structure of a Report

Outlined below are the main key points of a report, providing a general overview:

Cover Sheet:

The report's purpose should be stated succinctly and clearly, especially if it is not apparent from the title. Additional information may include your name, date, and the intended recipient.

Terms of Reference:

Under this heading, you can incorporate a brief explanation of the report's intended audience, reason for writing, and methods used. It can be presented as a caption or a single paragraph.

Synopsis (Abstract):

The synopsis should provide a brief description of the report's content, covering the report's objectives, findings, and timeframe. Aim for around half a page and avoid excessive detail or discussion; simply outline the main points. Remember, the summary is the first thing that the reader will read. It should offer a clear and helpful overview of the report's content.

Substance (Table of Contents):

The table of contents should list the different sections and headings along with their page numbers. Present the content page in a way that allows the reader to quickly check the list of headings and find specific parts of the report. You may choose to

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

number section headings and subheadings while providing page references. Ensure that your numbering system is clear and consistent throughout.

Introduction:

The introduction sets the foundation for the main body of the report. It should explain the report's objectives and scope. Identify any issues or limitations within the report and provide a description of the research methods and relevant background information if necessary.

Methods:

Under this heading, include details such as a list of equipment used, explanations of procedures followed, relevant information on materials used (including sources of materials), and details of any necessary preparation. Mention any encountered issues and subsequent changes in methodology.

Results:

This section should include a summary of the findings from the research or investigation, along with any essential charts, diagrams, or tables presenting gathered data that support your results. Present your results in a logical order without providing commentary. Discussion of your results should take place in the main body (Discussion) of the report.

Discussion:

The main body of the report is where you discuss the material you have gathered, analyzing and examining the facts and evidence with specific reference to the problem or issue. If your discussion section is lengthy, you may divide it into subsections with headings for clarity. Organize and group your points in a logical and easy-to-follow order. Use headings and subheadings to create a clear structure for your material. Utilize bullet points to present a series of points in an easy-to-follow list. As with the entire report, acknowledge and properly cite all sources used. For additional guidance, refer to your departmental handbook and other relevant resources.

End:

In the end, you should demonstrate the overall significance of the covered content. Remind the reader of the most significant points made in the report or highlight what you consider to be the most crucial issues or findings. However, avoid introducing any new material in the conclusion.

Reference Sections:

Under this heading, include all supporting data you have used that is not published. This may include tables, graphs, surveys, studies, or records. Refer to the appendices in the body of your report.

Acknowledgments:

If appropriate, recognize the support of specific organizations or individuals who provided information, advice, or assistance.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Glossary of Technical Terms:

A sequential list of specialized terms with concise explanations, including abbreviations or standard units used in the report.

Mastering report writing is essential for effective communication, evaluation, and decision-making in various fields. Understanding the types and functions of reports is crucial for academic and professional success in report writing.

5.1.3 Organising the Report and Proposal

Composing the Report: The Basic Stages

The process of creating an effective report involves clear, concise, and well-structured writing. To achieve this, careful planning and preparation are essential. The basic stages of successful report writing are described below. Allocate sufficient time for each stage, and ensure you have ample time for final editing and proofreading before the deadline.

Stage One: Understanding the Report Brief

The initial stage is crucial. You must fully comprehend the purpose of your report as outlined in the report brief or instructions. Identify the intended audience and the reason behind writing the report. Verify that you have a clear understanding of all instructions and requirements, seeking clarification if needed.

Stage Two: Gathering and Selecting Data

Once you are clear about the report's purpose, start gathering relevant information. Your data may come from various sources, and the amount of information required will depend on the report's level of detail.

Begin by reading relevant literature to enhance your understanding of the topic or issue before exploring other forms of data, such as surveys, questionnaires, etc. As you read and collect information, assess its relevance to your report and choose accordingly, referring back to your report brief for guidance.

Stage Three: Organizing Your Material

After gathering information, decide what to include and the order in which it should be presented. Group related points together, forming sections or segments. Always refer back to the report brief and be prepared to omit any information that is not directly relevant to the report. Arrange your material in a logical and easily understandable order.

Stage Four: Analyzing Your Material

Before writing the first draft of the report, take time to consider and make notes on the points you will present, using the facts and evidence you have collected. Consider the conclusions that can be drawn from the material, any limitations or flaws in the evidence, and potential conflicts between pieces of evidence. Presenting the information is not enough; you must relate it to the problem or issue stated in the report brief.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

Stage Five: Writing the Report

With your material organized into appropriate sections and headings, you can begin writing the first draft of your report. You may find it easier to write the summary and table of contents at the end when you have a clear picture of what will be included. Use a writing style that is direct and precise, avoiding unnecessary words, and state your conclusions clearly and succinctly. Structure each chapter, section, or paragraph clearly, following the format described below:

- Present the main idea of the section/segment/paragraph.
- Explain and expand on the idea, defining any key terms.
- Comment on each piece of evidence, showing how it relates to your points.
- Emphasize its significance to the overall report or establish a link to the next section/segment/paragraph.

Stage Six: Reviewing and Redrafting

Ideally, take a break before reviewing your first draft. Be prepared to revise or rework sections based on your review. Try to read the draft from the reader's perspective to ensure it is easy to follow with a clear and logical structure. Are the points succinctly but clearly explained, supported by relevant evidence? Writing on a word processor allows for easier restructuring and revising of sections or paragraphs. If you write the first draft by hand, write each section on separate pieces of paper to facilitate redrafting.

Stage Seven: Presentation

Once you are satisfied with the content and structure of your redrafted report, focus on the presentation. Ensure that the wording of each part/section/subheading is clear and precise. Confirm that you have adhered to the report brief's instructions regarding format and presentation. Check for consistency in numbering of chapters, sections, and appendices. Ensure that all sources are acknowledged and correctly cited. Proofread your report for spelling or grammar errors. If time permits, proofread multiple times.

5.1.4 Resume Writing

Resumes serve as comprehensive documents or summaries of an individual's education, professional background, qualifications, and skills, essential for job applications. Although it may seem straightforward, both seasoned professionals and first-time jobseekers often find it challenging to create an effective resume. In such cases, a resume writing guide becomes an invaluable tool, guiding you through the process and offering expert insights on crafting a resume that will secure you an interview for your dream job!

How to Initiate Your Resume?

When crafting the perfect resume, remember that it is essentially a document marketing yourself. Highlight the most relevant and significant details about your career history, abilities, and personality to showcase your strengths and suitability for the desired job. The ultimate goal is to convince the prospective employer to invite you for an interview.

© Amity University Online

Notes

What Constitutes a Good Resume?

A good resume stands out due to its readability factor. Ensure that the layout is well-organized, free of errors, and presents information concisely. Poor readability might cause your resume to be discarded without consideration. Additionally, the chosen resume format should complement your profile, emphasizing your strengths and downplaying any potential weaknesses.

Tips for Crafting an Outstanding Resume:

1. Tailor Your Resume: Focus specifically on the employer's requirements. Use the job description to tailor your resume, highlighting skills and experiences that match the job's demands. However, avoid dishonesty.
2. Be Unique: Remember that you are not the only one applying for the position. Invest time in creating a clear, captivating, and unique resume to stand out among numerous applicants.

By following these guidelines and making the most of your professional experiences, you can create an effective resume that demonstrates you are the perfect fit for the job opportunity.

Stage 1: Choosing the correct organisation

As depicted in continue designs, there are 3 unique kinds of resume formats, which suit various profiles of jobseekers and various areas or ventures. The fundamental structure of a resume must be taken from one of these 3 resume formats:

Chronological, Functional or Combined

The best approach to pick your resume design is by finding out about each unique style and taking a look at the different focal points to discover which resume structure best suits your expert needs and experience.

Chronological resume – Best for jobseekers with a consistent development in one division all through their vocation.

Functional resume– Ideal for jobseekers who have been independently employed or have openings in their activity history.

Combines resume– Perfect for jobseekers with a particular range of abilities or those hoping to change vocation ways.

For a more inside and out prologue to the resume styles, perused our manual for continue organizes and get a clearer thought of how to design a resume accurately as indicated by your inclinations.

Stage 2: Starting a resume

When composing a resume, it is important to commence with a distinct and significant heading that includes your name and contact information. Immediately following this, you should present a suitable statement, such as a resume objective, summary statement, or qualifications overview, depending on the chosen resume format. This introduction plays a critical role in capturing the attention of potential employers.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

The initial section of your resume, occupying the top third of the page, needs to be visually appealing and compelling since it is the primary means by which you can attract the interest of prospective employers. It is crucial to showcase your value as an asset to the organization by demonstrating why you are the perfect fit for both the position and the company.

Stage 3: Practical Tips for Resume Writing

Once you have established your foundation, it is time to begin optimizing your resume by implementing these expert tips on tailoring it to your specific needs. To enhance your resume, it is crucial to conduct thorough research on the position being offered as well as the overall guidelines and atmosphere of the organization. This will provide you with a comprehensive understanding of the qualities and attributes that the hiring managers are seeking. Take advantage of this information by showcasing your skills using strategically chosen keywords derived from the job description or company branding. Keep in mind that nowadays, some companies utilize an Applicant Tracking System (ATS) to evaluate all received resumes, allowing only those that meet the requirements to be reviewed by a hiring manager. When crafting a chronological resume format or providing examples of your skills for a functional or combination resume format, utilize active voice to describe your work roles and responsibilities.

Stage 4: Additional sections

Developing an effective resume does not solely rely on academic background, work experience, or prior engagements. It is crucial to conduct thorough research and include relevant sections tailored to individual candidates, considering their specific career history and requirements. Alongside the essential components of a resume, it is recommended to personalize it by incorporating additional subsections that highlight pertinent information. The following are some potential supplementary sections that can make your resume stand out and demonstrate creativity:

- Skills
- Volunteer Work
- Personal Interests
- Honors and Achievements
- Languages
- Internships
- Publications
- Certifications

In each of these resume sections, it is advisable to provide names, dates, and brief descriptions. This data adds value to your application by enabling employers to gain insights into your personality and form a mental image beyond a mere list of professional accomplishments.

Stage 5: Finalizing a resume.

At last, with the base of your winning resume finished, you can utilise the accompanying exhortation to guarantee nothing has been left to risk. In the event that you have decided to utilise a resume developer or resume layouts, at that point you will

© Amity University Online

Notes

at any rate spare yourself the need to organise your resume with arrangement, edges, separating and the overall page set-up. In any case, in the event that you decide to make a resume without any preparation make sure to survey every one of these angles and guarantee that you have a left-hand edge and adjusted content all through. With regards to figuring out how to make a decent resume, to guarantee the most ideal intelligibility, it is prudent to take care with the text style type you decide to utilise and the other text style attributes, for example, intense, italic or underlining. These ought to be accustomed to focus on specific realities or territories, for example, in headings or separating between subtleties. Keep up a similar structure all through and don't utilise in excess of 2 changing text styles.

Last yet positively not least, PROOFREAD your resume! This implies re-perusing and altering your resume as important until you are exceptionally happy with the outcomes. It can likewise be useful to ask a friend or guide to take a read through to assist you with any recommendations for a resume or to get botches that you might not have seen. Presently, with a total powerful resume, alongside your expert introductory letter, you can start going after the position you had always wanted.

Resume Length: How long should a resume be? What is the ideal length for a resume? This subject of discussion can conquer some jobseekers yet here are the essential standards to follow for how long a resume ought to be.

Given the insignificant time that a recruiting chief spends assessing each resume that the individual gets, it is imperative to keep them as brief and forthright as could be expected under the circumstances. Managers are partitioned on the ideal resume length question, and you will discover contrasting suppositions regarding the matter contingent upon the activity job you're applying for.

The most generally acknowledged length for a resume is one A4-page of text and data just as one A4-page for an introductory letter to go with the application. Any additional data, endorsements or references can be independently gathered. This doesn't mean obviously that you can't compose a more extended resume, just that a basic manual for continues length is keep up a 1-page format and work from this.

Most standard resume layouts are one page long. If you have a long and significant work history or numerous undertakings or have gone to numerous courses or meetings, you may need to broaden certain segments of your resume and as long as the data is appropriate to the application, it is completely adequate to present a more drawn-out resume. Recall that if you can't grow as much as you might want to on your resume, you likewise have the expert introductory letter, which permits you to broadly expound on specific subjects or expand on tasks, aptitudes or encounters.

What not to Remember for a Resume

Below are some do's and don'ts to consider when composing a resume, including information that should NOT be included:

Do's:

- Use specific and tailored statements in your resume.
- Include relevant and significant experiences.

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

- Opt for easily readable and professional fonts.

Don'ts:

- Avoid using generic statements or cliché phrases in your resume.
- Do not include irrelevant information or experiences.
- Avoid using fonts that are difficult to read or too casual.

If you are unsure about whether to include certain activities, courses, publications, awards, etc., or if you are concerned about limited space, you can mention them in your accompanying cover letter.

5.2 Employment Communication

5.2.1 Group Discussion

What is a Group Discussion? A "Group Discussion" or GD is a structured process where a collection of individuals, usually 7-12 participants, engage in a face-to-face discussion to achieve a common goal. The goal may be to exchange information, ideas, or opinions, leading to increased knowledge, understanding, healthy disagreements, or the development of knowledge-based arguments, usually facilitated by a moderator.

Who participates in a Group Discussion? GDs are commonly utilised by various Organisations, institutions, business schools, etc., to assess certain character traits and skills in candidates. These traits may include communication skills, public speaking confidence, teamwork, leadership abilities, social behaviour, and problem-solving skills. GDs play a significant role in the shortlisting process for recruitment or admissions in an organisation or institution.

How is a GD Conducted? During a GD, participants are presented with a topic or situation, which can be historical, hypothetical, or case-based. They are given some time to think about it, and then the group engages in a discussion about the topic for a specific duration (usually between 10-40 minutes, varying among Organisations). While the discussion takes place, moderators or panelists observe each candidate's performance based on predetermined criteria and assign scores accordingly.

Similar to a football match where players work as a team, passing the ball to each other and aiming for a common goal, a GD also relies on teamwork and the combination of different perspectives to achieve a shared objective. It is a platform for group members to share their views, opinions, and emotions about a specific subject, issue, problem, or situation that they all have common interests in.

Why are "GDs" conducted? In recent years, Group Discussions have become popular as a method to assess a candidate's soft skills. While candidates' IQ and knowledge are evaluated through written tests, the significance of emotional intelligence and social skills has emerged.

GDs serve as a tool to evaluate candidates' social and interpersonal abilities, enabling Organisations to determine whether candidates possess the essential qualities and skills to contribute effectively to achieving common goals.

© Amity University Online

Notes

5.2.2 Qualities/Skills Assessed in Group Discussion

Why GD is Significant?

- It assesses whether a competitor is an ideal choice for the association.
- It surveys how a member performs under various circumstances in a gathering.
- It assists with deciding how one conceptualises and moves his thoughts through the conversation.
- It helps in examining the applicant's disposition towards individual individuals through one's correspondence and relational aptitudes, listening capacity, lowliness and resilience to others thoughts.
- It helps in revealing insight into applicant's authority and administrative abilities, critical thinking inclination, innovative reasoning and information on differing subjects.

Since, cooperation is a basic component of business the executives and corporate work-circle, an individual's capacity to perform well in a GD is exceptionally basic for a fruitful vocation. A GD assists with accomplishing bunch objectives just as individual objectives. The analyst can assess both the character characteristics and gathering abilities of up-and-comers partaking in a G.D. It is essentially a circumstance test wherein an example of an up-and-comer's gathering value and potential as a specialist comes out expressly. Group Discussions are directed to assess the competitors on certain character characteristics. Here are a portion of the significant character characteristics and aptitudes that an up comer ought to have to perform to do well in a GD:

Authority aptitudes and activity taking capacity, stepping up is demonstrative of your capacity to confer bearing to the gathering and characterise the key issue(s) along which the conversation needs to advance. The three "Cs" which rank you high on this boundary are Clarity (the primary concerns to be examined), Content (the vertical profundity in each point) and Certainty. The "Watchword Approach", wherein you start with characterising the predominant words in the theme and afterward create resulting develops, can assist you with starting successfully. This will likewise exhibit your authority aptitudes.

For instance, in a point like "Should Republic Day festivities be reclassified?" the watchwords are "Republic" and "re-imagined". Hence, a decent methodology can be giving scenery against which this day is praised, at that point graduating to the manner in which it is commended lastly discussing available resources of rethinking (if by any means). Whenever exhibited appropriately, this expertise gets you in the obvious spotlight and mirrors your capacity to break the ice and summon a conversation! Nonetheless, whenever misused (e.g., you may begin on a high note and afterward suddenly subside into a scary quiet), it places you in a humiliating position!

Knowledge:

Knowledge mirrors your capacity to have a feeling on issues and worries of contemporary pertinence and henceforth your capacity to interface with various parts of nature (financial, political, business, social, and so forth.). It expects, significantly

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

more, pertinence for a reality-escalated theme like “Indian Economy in the post WTO system”. Here, information turns into a sharp differentiator and encourages you to use a solid upper hand. Being knowledgeable in current issues and issues of simultaneous significance can assist you with doing great along this boundary.

Group Dynamics:

This essentially shows the expertise to find some kind of harmony between singular greatness and gathering execution. An individual scoring high on this boundary will be more plausible to work in gatherings and thus contribute adequately to associations. It likewise mirrors your group abilities, listening aptitudes and eagerness to acknowledge differing perspectives.

Legitimate Ability/Analytical Skills:

This shows your capacity to successfully flowchart your point of view and investigates the theme in a thorough way. It mirrors your capacity to develop coherent contentions and structure the conversation in a smooth way, evading irregular attacks.

Horizontal Thinking:

This demonstrates your ability to think on your feet and contribute with creative and unconventional insights. It is especially relevant for abstract topics, where the scope to view the subject from an innovative perspective is proportionately higher. For instance, in a topic like “red and blue,” someone might interpret it as a comparison between Coke (red) and Pepsi (blue) and analyze their marketing strategies, or delve into the gender differences as reference points.

Communication Skills:

This aspect evaluates the candidate’s ability to engage with the group and is assessed from a dual perspective - verbal and non-verbal. Verbal communication assesses the candidate’s fluency, clarity, and articulation, while the non-verbal aspect examines their effectiveness in terms of body language, gestures, eye contact, and posture.

5.2.3 Do’s and Don’ts in a Group Discussion

Rules and Guidelines for Participating in a Group Discussion:

Dos of Participating in a GD:

- Pay close attention to the given topic.
- Jot down your thoughts on paper.
- Initiate the discussion confidently if you are familiar with the topic.
- Listen to others attentively if the topic is unfamiliar to you.
- Support your points with relevant facts and figures.
- Make short contributions of 25-30 seconds, multiple times.
- Allow others to express their views.

© Amity University Online

Notes

- Speak politely and respectfully, acknowledging contributions from others.
- Disagree respectfully and agree with valid points.
- Summarize the discussion if a conclusion has not been reached.

Don’ts of Participating in a Group Discussion:

- Do not initiate the discussion if you lack sufficient knowledge about the given topic.
- Avoid speaking excessively, interrupting, or monopolizing the discussion.
- Refrain from arguing loudly or shouting during the GD.
- Avoid staring at the evaluators.
- Do not bring up irrelevant topics or divert the conversation.
- Avoid negative body language, such as touching the nose, leaning back in the chair, tapping the table with a pen, etc.
- Avoid citing inaccurate or random statistics.
- Display confidence with a steady voice and composed hands.
- Do not try to dominate the conversation.
- Avoid putting others in an uncomfortable position by asking intrusive questions.

5.2.4 Effective Participation in Group Discussion

Effective Group Discussion Leadership:

Leading a group discussion requires certain skills and qualities to create a productive and inclusive environment. Here are some key aspects to consider when leading a group discussion:

1. Set the Stage:
   - ❖ If you have the opportunity to plan in advance, choose a comfortable and relaxed space for the discussion.
   - ❖ Provide food and drinks to create a comfortable and welcoming atmosphere.
   - ❖ Bring materials like newsprint and markers to record ideas during the conversation.
   - ❖ Familiarize yourself with the purpose and content of the discussion topic.
2. Define the Topic:
   - ❖ Help the group define the specific topic of discussion, especially if it’s not predetermined.
   - ❖ Guide the group by asking relevant questions and encouraging participants to share their ideas.
3. Facilitate the Open Process:
   - ❖ Pay attention to the process, content, and interpersonal dynamics of the conversation.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

- ❖ Ensure there is no predetermined outcome and no single individual dominates the discussion.
- ❖ Encourage an open and respectful environment where all ideas are considered.

4. Include All Members:
   - ❖ Ensure that everyone has an opportunity to express their thoughts and opinions freely.
   - ❖ Be attentive to quieter or less decisive participants, encouraging their participation.
   - ❖ Safeguard "minority rights" to allow unconventional or unpopular ideas to be expressed and discussed respectfully.
5. Stimulate the Conversation:
   - ❖ Ask thought-provoking questions and provide relevant information or arguments to stimulate thinking.
   - ❖ Move the conversation forward when necessary, especially if the group is stuck or struggling with the topic.
6. Maintain Neutrality:
   - ❖ As a leader, remain neutral and refrain from imposing your personal opinions or solutions on the group.
   - ❖ Your role is to facilitate the conversation and encourage diverse perspectives.
7. Manage Conflict:
   - ❖ Address any conflicts that arise in a respectful and constructive manner.
   - ❖ Encourage disagreements to be based on the content of ideas, not personal attacks.
   - ❖ Help the group resolve disputes and find common ground collaboratively.
8. Keep the Discussion on Track:
   - ❖ Ensure the conversation stays focused on the topic and relevant issues.
   - ❖ Summarize significant points and concepts to clarify understanding.
9. Conclude the Discussion:
   - ❖ Allow participants to offer final thoughts or ask any remaining questions.
10. Encourage Ongoing Interaction:
    - ❖ If the group discussion leads to action or decision-making, ensure there is a plan for further interaction or implementation.
    - ❖ Foster a supportive environment for ongoing conversations and collaboration among the members.

Leading a group discussion requires a blend of facilitation skills, active listening, and the ability to guide the conversation without dominating it. By creating an inclusive and respectful atmosphere, you can promote meaningful exchanges of ideas and perspectives, leading to productive outcomes and fostering a sense of collective engagement among participants.

© Amity University Online

Notes

5.2.5 Mock GD Sessions

GD MOCK example

Aditi, Bijoy, Charu, Daisy and Ehsan are trusting that their GD will begin. They don't have a point yet and are trusting that the arbitrator will make everyone agreeable. There, the arbitrator takes a look at the clock and reports: You have 5 minutes for this group discussion. Please start.

Bijoy: This ought to be fascinating. A GD on GD! I propose we ought to talk about the significance of a GD first. That is to say, why have a GD by any means?

Charu: I locate this odd. How might you have a GD on GD? We ought to examine some current theme to test our insight.

Ehsan: I concur this is somewhat bizarre. Simultaneously, our responsibility is to direct an important conversation paying little heed to the subject. Bijoy has recommended we start with the significance of GD. Today, GD is a significant piece of different determination techniques.

Aditi: GD is about collaboration. That is all.

Bijoy: Management is tied in with working with individuals. I guess GD is one method of building up one capacity to work with others. How we can lead and be driven.

Charu: (Laughs) You are utilising some great administration language, old buddy! I do not think GD has anything to do with driving or being driven. And no more, a GD may give a thought regarding how a conference is held. Else it is just about offering your insight to other people.

Bijoy: (Visibly bothered) Looks like you are secure with your insight. Maybe there is no requirement for a gathering or even a conversation?

Ehsan: We make them intrigue focuses here, Leadership and sharing information. Maybe, a GD is a decent apparatus to evaluate how well you can work inside a gathering.

Daisy: I need to

Aditi: I do not think any conversation is important except if everybody has a similar degree of information.

Daisy: I need to state something. Acquittal in the event that I make any off base. I am from vernacular medium Aditi: Do not burn through our time discussing your experience. The point is GD. Discussion about that.

Bijoy: Every subject has different points. In this way, numerous heads can raise numerous thoughts.

Charu: Also, an excessive number of cooks ruin the stock (chuckles).

Ehsan: Yes, a gathering makes it conceivable to conceptualise any issue. Maybe

Daisy has something to add to this idea ...

(C) Amity University Online

Notes

Daisy: Thanks for giving me possibility. A GD is useful for consensus. It is in every case better everyone concurs. In any case just a single individual is there.

Charu: (Leaning forward and highlighting Daisy) I think the right word is agreement. Donot utilise a word except if you realise what you are discussing.

Bijoy: Consensus is fine. Yet, is it fundamental that everybody ought to have a similar perspective?

Ehsan: That is an intriguing idea. Truly, Daisy is correct that a GD is about agreement however there can even now be contrasts. A GD gives a chance to talk about different parts of an issue and gauge benefits and negative marks of various methodologies.

Charu: Agree to oppose this idea.

Bijoy: But the inquiry is the means by which to prevail in GDs. I think the main essential is persistence. A few of us must figure out how to quiet down and allow others to talk (takes a look at Charu).

Aditi: If everybody follows that we will just have quiet and no conversation.

Ehsan: I guess the fact of the matter is to partake and allow others additionally to take an interest.

Daisy: Please would I be able to talk?

Aditi: Come on! You do not need to ask for authorisation to talk!

Daisy: I said that since I figured somebody might have needed to talk before me. Anyway, is it unrealistic to just tune in?

Charu: (Smirks) I do not know how the arbitrator will rate your significant quietness!

Bijoy: But Daisy, nobody can guess what you might be thinking. Except if you talk, how would you contribute?

Ehsan: I think a GD is a lot of like a conference. Each member may introduce an individual perspective however the contemplating that perspective is aggregate.

Aditi: I do not figure you can contrast a GD with a conference. In a gathering, there is generally a director whose activity is to control the gathering.

Bijoy: A GD might not have an administrator yet I guess one individual typically raises as the pioneer and aides the conversation.

Charu: I guess somebody likes himself to be a pioneer. This is so exhausting!

Mediator: Your time is up. Much obliged to you everybody. Moderator notes: Ehsan shows initiative aptitudes and the capacity to hold a gathering together. He seems to have a decent handle of the subject however overall, the GD neglected to do equity to the center subject of how to succeed. Bijoy likewise makes them intrigue thoughts yet is inclined to being incited without any problem. Charu is excessively certain and excessively brimming with herself to have the option to add to a gathering. Aditi is liable of bigotry and impolite interferences. Daisy needs to chip away at her language and her certainty; however, she may have the correct ideas

© Amity University Online

Notes

Summary

- Report writing involves the process of gathering information, analyzing data, and presenting findings in a structured and concise manner.
- Organizing a report involves structuring the content in a logical and coherent manner.
- This includes determining the appropriate sections and subsections, creating an outline, and arranging the information in a way that supports the report's objectives.
- Resume writing involves crafting a document that showcases an individual's qualifications, skills, and experiences with the intention of applying for a job or internship.
- A well-crafted resume should be concise, tailored to the specific job requirements, and effectively showcase the applicant's relevant achievements and abilities.
- Group discussion is a collaborative activity where a group of individuals come together to exchange ideas, share perspectives, and solve problems.
- It involves active participation, effective communication, and respectful listening.
- Be mindful of the allocated time and ensure that you contribute without dominating the discussion.

Glossary

- Report: A formal document that provides information, analysis, and recommendations on a specific topic or issue.
- Resume: A concise document summarizing an individual's education, work experience, skills, and achievements, used for job applications.
- Group Discussion: An interactive process where a group of individuals share their ideas, opinions, and perspectives on a given topic.

Check Your Understanding

1. What is the purpose of a report?
   a) To present personal opinions
   b) To communicate information
   c) To entertain readers
   d) To persuade readers
2. Which of the following should be included in the introduction of a report?
   a) Detailed findings and analysis
   b) Recommendations and conclusions
   c) Background information and objectives
   d) Appendices and references
3. What is the recommended structure for organizing a report?
   a) Findings, analysis, conclusion, and recommendation

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

b) Recommendations, analysis, findings, and conclusion

c) Conclusion, findings, analysis, and recommendations

d) Analysis, conclusion, recommendations, and findings

4. Which of the following is an effective way to organize information in a report?

a) Presenting information randomly

b) Grouping information by topic or theme

c) Including all details and data in one section

d) Using technical jargon to convey information

5. What is the purpose of a resume?

a) To provide personal contact information

b) To list professional experiences only

c) To showcase skills, qualifications, and experiences

d) To include personal hobbies and interests

6. Which of the following should be included in the education section of a resume?

a) High school achievements

b) College degree and major

c) Current job responsibilities

d) Professional certifications

7. What is the main objective of a group discussion?

a) To prove individual superiority

b) To share personal opinions and experiences

c) To collaborate and find a solution or conclusion

d) To promote a healthy debate and argument

8. Which of the following is a characteristic of effective group discussion participation?

a) Dominating the conversation and ignoring others

b) Focusing only on personal agenda and interests

c) Active listening and respectful communication

d) Avoiding participation to maintain neutrality

9. How can you effectively participate in a group discussion?

a) Interrupting others to make your point

b) Using strong language and gestures to assert dominance

c) Encouraging others to speak and actively listening

d) Ignoring opposing viewpoints and sticking to your own ideas

10. Which of the following is a key factor in successful group discussion participation?

a) Focusing on individual achievements

© Amity University Online

Notes

b) Building consensus and seeking common ground

c) Promoting personal interests above group objectives

d) Rejecting all ideas that differ from your own viewpoint

11. Which of the following is NOT a typical component of a proposal process in reports?

a) Introduction

b) Executive summary

c) Conclusion

d) Recommendations

12. Which of the following is the most appropriate section to provide an overview of the research methodology used in a report?

a) Introduction

b) Findings

c) Conclusion

d) Recommendations

13. Which of the following is a DO in a group discussion?

a) Interrupt others when you strongly disagree with their points.

b) Listen actively to other participants.

c) Speak loudly to ensure your ideas are heard.

d) Dominate the conversation and steer it towards your own interests.

14. In a mock group discussion session, the facilitator's role primarily involves:

a) Dominating the conversation and expressing personal opinions.

b) Maintaining the time limit and ensuring equal participation.

c) Providing detailed feedback to individual participants.

d) Dismissing participants' ideas that do not align with their own.

15. Which of the following is the correct order of the proposal process in reports?

a) Conclusion, Recommendations, Introduction, Executive summary

b) Introduction, Executive summary, Recommendations, Conclusion

c) Recommendations, Conclusion, Executive summary, Introduction

d) Executive summary, Introduction, Conclusion, Recommendations

16. Which of the following is a DON'T in a group discussion?

a) Show respect for others' viewpoints, even if you disagree.

b) Stay on topic and avoid irrelevant discussions.

c) Use appropriate body language and maintain eye contact.

d) Interrupt others while they are speaking.

17. One of the key objectives of a mock group discussion session is to:

a) Create a competitive environment among participants.

(c) Amity University Online

Notes

b) Promote active listening and collaborative problem-solving.

c) Identify and publicly criticize participants' weaknesses.

d) Exclude participants who hold minority viewpoints.

18. Which of the following should be included in the conclusion section of a report?

a) Detailed analysis and discussion of findings.

b) New information that was not covered in the report.

c) Summary of the main points and key takeaways.

d) Personal opinions and biases of the report writer.

19. Which of the following is a DO in a group discussion?

a) Avoid using facts and evidence to support your arguments.

b) Speak for extended periods without allowing others to contribute.

c) Encourage constructive criticism and open dialogue.

d) Use dismissive language to undermine opposing viewpoints.

20. Which of the following sections provides an in-depth analysis of the findings and data presented in a report?

a) Executive summary

b) Introduction

c) Recommendations

d) Findings

Exercise

1. What is report writing? Why you think it's important.
2. Hold group discussion in your family on these topics:
   - Why phones are necessity these days?
   - Is Yoga and meditation important in today' time.
   - Youth and politics
   - Vocational careers options are the new norm in youth today?
3. Hold group discussion with your peers on these topics:
   - Investment on Gold - Is It Good or Bad for the economy
   - Is India Safe for Women
   - Technical Education versus Practical Education.
   - Casteless world
   - Beauty Contests degrade womanhood: Agree or Disagree

Learning Activities

1. How can you effectively structure the body of a report to present information logically and coherently?
2. How can you effectively structure the body of a report to present information logically and coherently?

© Amity University Online

Notes

3. How can you effectively structure the body of a report to present information logically and coherently?
4. How can you effectively structure the body of a report to present information logically and coherently?

Check Your Understanding- Answers

Here's the answer key:

1. b) To communicate information
2. c) Background information and objectives
3. c) Conclusion, findings, analysis, and recommendations
4. b) Grouping information by topic or theme
5. c) To showcase skills, qualifications, and experiences
6. b) College degree and major
7. c) To collaborate and find a solution or conclusion
8. c) Active listening and respectful communication
9. c) Encouraging others to speak and actively listening
10. b) Building consensus and seeking common ground
11. d) Recommendations
12. a) Introduction
13. b) Listen actively to other participants.
14. b) Maintaining the time limit and ensuring equal participation.
15. d) Executive summary, Introduction, Conclusion, Recommendations
16. d) Interrupt others while they are speaking.
17. b) Promote active listening and collaborative problem-solving.
18. c) Summary of the main points and key takeaways.
19. c) Encourage constructive criticism and open dialogue.
20. d) Findings

Further Reading and Bibliography

1. Business Communication and Report Writing Handbook, August and September 2019. The Training Edge and FASSET.
2. Business Communication Today Courtland L. Bovée, C. Allen Paul and John V. Thill. Pearson. 2021.
3. Business Communication: https://www.Icsi.Edu/media/webmodules/cseet/Business_communication.Pdf

(C) Amity University Online